I'm a Brooklyn based documentary filmmaker. I direct, shoot and edit, and work with talented collaborators from sound designers to animators to producers. In my current work I live in a place or community for months at a time, shooting by myself and hoping to give voice to the smaller stories that surround us every day but which we rarely celebrate. Recent recipient of grants from the New York State Council on the Arts and the Jerome Foundation, and a proud member of the Women Make Movies Production Assistance Program. Between working on my current films, I am producing a science documentary for BBC & PBS, working with Kim Longinotto on her new documentary, editing the interactive VR documentary "Blackout", and teaching free and low cost media classes in Brooklyn.
