*Before all this happens, however,
they will seize and persecute you...because of my name.
It leads to your giving testimony...
I myself give you wisdom in speaking...*

Thirty-third Sunday November 13, 2016

Has there ever been an age without trial and turmoil? What century has not seen wars?

Yet Christ, seeming to anticipate our wonder, offered this advice: "Do not be perturbed. ... These things are bound to happen."

Hmmm. Bound to happen; life is bound to be this way.

Christ is not speaking about the end of all times, but the condition of every time. Each day is the last. Each time is the end time.

Each human being faces the end of the world in the span of a life, whether it reach eight minutes or eighty years. The world, its opportunities and losses, passes away for us each night. Every sunset announces a closing of a day that will never come again. And each generation, like each death and every day, witnesses the signs of the end times.

For those who hope, it is otherwise.

As Paul writes in his Letter to the Romans, that groaning of all creation is an act of giving birth. "We, too, groan inwardly as we wait for our bodies to be set free. For we must be content to hope that we shall be saved."

And so Christ counsels us not to be alarmed at our condition. Words and wisdom will be given. Through all the turmoil of our days, our generation, our species, it is not death, but a new saving birth which is assured. In some final sense, "not a hair of your head will be harmed." In patient endurance, life will be saved. We await, then the arrival. "O Come, O Come," will be our prayer.

Today we will celebrate the Anointing of the Sick. This sacrament symbolizes all human efforts at healing the ill, sustaining the elderly and consoling the dying as it celebrates and mediates God's power to restore people to health - spiritual, physical, and psychological - or to give hope for eternal life.

Today . . . Water!!!
 After mass you are invited to visit the "CONFLUENCE" of the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers. Join us as we thank God for the abundance of safe water which we are able to use and enjoy. Directions to be provided by Marie Kremer.
