St. Patrick’s Day Breakfast 2017

The Irish American Partnership hosted its annual St. Patrick’s Day Breakfast on March 17th at the Seaport Hotel with over 330 in attendance.

Mayor Marty Walsh opened the event with a reminder that the attitudes towards Irish arriving to Boston’s shores were once as vitriolic as the rhetoric heard towards new immigrants and refugees today. He emphasized his commitment towards making Boston a safe and welcoming place for all and asked the audience to act compassionately towards new arrivals to our city. Mayor Walsh also gave a special tribute to Joe Leary, who gave Partnership grants to the schools his mother and father attended. Mayor Walsh said of all the honors he received after becoming mayor, those were the greatest.

John Cullinane gave a warm introduction to Partnership President Joseph Leary, praising his visionary work investing in Ireland’s youth through education.

President Emeritus Joe Leary reflected on his 28-year tenure at the Partnership, thanking his family for their support and Chuck Feeney for his initial seed-funding of the organization.

State Senator Linda Dorcena Forry presented Joe with an official commendation from the Massachusetts State Senate for his work in Boston and Ireland.

Irish American Partnership CEO Mary Sugrue spoke about the Partnership’s programs, emphasizing the direct grants to primary schools across Ireland, science learning initiatives, and the Partnership’s new poetry program which focuses on themes of emigration and the Irish Diaspora. She gave a special thanks to Joe Leary for his service to the organization and Kevin Leary for his generous, long-time support of the St. Patrick’s Day breakfast.

Katherine Zappone TD, Minister of Children and Youth Affairs, spoke on behalf of the Irish government. She commended the Partnership for its work in directly funding schools and community programs in Ireland, which has a transformative impact on the youth population.
