In December 1992, a group of activists came together to create the Canadian HIV/AIDS Legal Network. They were united in their recognition that any effective response to the pandemic must ensure that the human rights of people living with HIV and communities particularly affected by HIV are respected, protected and fulfilled. Today, we’re one of the world’s leading organizations tackling the legal and human rights issues related to HIV, and advocating at both the policy and community levels. We work tirelessly to defend the rights of people affected by HIV, from women, newcomers, and gay men, to prisoners, people who use drugs, sex workers, and men who have sex with men.

ICASO acts as a global policy voice on HIV issues that impact diverse communities around the world. ICASO understands that technology alone will not solve the AIDS epidemic, but that people and communities will continue to be central to this fight, particularly as we combat stigma, discrimination, and legal barriers to health and rights. Further, ICASO believes that communities are best equipped to articulate their own needs, priorities, and solutions. Thus ICASO’s advocacy work champions the leadership of civil society and key populations in the effort to end AIDS. ICASO does this through collaborative partnerships with people and organizations in all regions and various sectors, always with a view to serving and empowering communities.

AIDS-Free World is an international advocacy organization that exposes the injustice, discrimination and inequality that underpin AIDS and other global health crises. The organization applies a combination of targeted research and analysis; legal advocacy and impact litigation; strategic communication, negotiation, arbitration and diplomacy. It identifies the power-brokers and decision-makers responsible for creating systemic problems and those responsible for solving them, and holds both to account. With a small team of advocates and a vast network of friends and allies developed over several decades, AIDS-Free World uncovers the double standards practiced at the highest levels of institutions and governments, and advocates, with its trademark outspokenness and tenacity, for the legal and policy reforms required for a world free of AIDS and other social injustices.
