Are you a local artist who can turn a 800-square-foot gallery space something impactful and eye-catching? People's Liberty, Cincinnati's philanthropic laboratory, is looking for three talents to utilize their storefront Globe Gallery, located at the organization's Over-the-Rh headquarters. They begin accepting proposals on June 15 — when application goes live — until July 20, and will notify the winning artists late August. The storefront will undergo a trio of transformations in letting each artist have their own individual experience.

They don't expect you to do it by yourself — the winning individuals will receive a $15,000 grant to install their exhibits, and will get assistance curating their projects from the organization.

They're looking for engaging, daring ideas that capitalize on the opportunities a storefront gallery space offers. The application requires a title, a video submission, a budget and a timeline, and will be reviewed by an independent panel.

The lab, which strives to bring together "civic-minded talent to address challenges and uncover opportunities to accelerate positive transformation of Greater Cincinnati," underwent renovations in March.
