

REAL ESTATE

Inside the Alabama castle that wants to be Versailles

By Zachary Kussin

October 13, 2015 | 2:23pm

Take a peek at this Alabama mansion that's heading to auction this month.

Photo: Handout

Sweet home Alabama!

An insanely opulent 27-acre estate in Birmingham, Ala. — which is also touted as the state's largest — will head to auction on Oct. 31.

Standing at roughly 55,000 square feet, the manse, the design of which is inspired by European royal castles, has 15 bedrooms, 16 bathrooms and six half-bathrooms. It took four years to construct and cost over $30 million. And it's no wonder — ridiculous features abound.

Beyond its size, the most notable accoutrement is the estate's massive guitar-shaped driveway, which surrounds gardens and fountains. Previous media reports have dubbed the spread The Guitar House.

But that's just scratching the surface. Other outdoor perks include a six-stall barn with an apartment above it, plus a riding arena for the horses to strut their stuff. There's also a pool with a waterfall and two covered cabanas.

Inside, you'd think you were in Versailles. The main house boasts gold leaf, stucco, millwork and stonework detailing throughout. The entry foyer alone has a sweeping staircase, a custom-painted ceiling mural and a crystal chandelier. It leads to the great room, which has more chandeliers, a fireplace, floor-to-ceiling windows and herringbone tile floors.

The private quarters include separate his-and-hers master suites with spa-like bathrooms and walk-in closets.

But for some serious fun, there's a wine cellar with storage for 2,000 bottles, a gym, a billiards room and a 25-seat cinema-style screening room with a 170-inch screen.

Guests might want a piece of this, and there's room for them. In addition to all of the above, there's a 3,000-square-foot guest house with a two-car garage.

Want in? All you need is a driver's license and a $100,000 deposit to bid.