November 10, 2010

Dear children of Lubuto:

At Dow Jones we believe in the power of words. We believe in the power of words to inform and educate, to elevate and transcend.

We at Dow Jones believe the words in this library have the power to connect you and us. Over oceans and borders, past time and place, the words we read and write allow us to share ideas, imagination, inspiration and aspiration.

Dow Jones is a publisher in print, online and on digital devices. We make newspapers, newswires, magazines, video and radio. We develop technology to deliver information in new and better ways. We use technology to make readers more aware and more astute. More than anything, we are a resource for a global audience eager to know more so that it can know best.

We want this library to be much the same for you. We want it to be a resource for your curiosity and your dreams. We want the words we now share to be a starting point on a journey of knowledge and learning that carries you forward in your lives.

Dow Jones is proud to have this library, these books and these words in common with you. On behalf of this company and its employees, we are grateful for the opportunity to share with the children of Zambia our passion for knowledge and the power of words.

Sincerely,

Les Hinton