LUBUTO n. Enlightenment, Knowledge and Light in Icibemba, the language of the Bemba people of Zambia and the Democratic Republic of the Congo

To Lubuto Friends and Supporters:

We made significant progress in 2009 towards realizing our vision for the Lubuto Library Project as a center for a range of enrichment opportunities for vulnerable children and youth in sub-Saharan Africa, including educational, cultural and community programs. With our beautiful libraries and excellent collection of books at the heart of our approach, we significantly expanded our programs to include additional art, dance, theater, computer skills, and perhaps most life-changing, motivational mentoring.

Lubuto created the film Our Time to Bring Change to provide a window on how we work with great books and children in a wide variety of enriching programs. Based on Martin's Big Words, an award-winning children’s book about the life of Martin Luther King Jr., the film shows how we reach children and youth through storytelling, art, drama, creative writing and life skills development. The results are strikingly creative and personal expressions by the children who participate.

This year we also saw progress on other Lubuto initiatives. Literacy experts have established that children are handicapped if they have to learn to read in a language that is not their native tongue. Since our inception, it has been Lubuto’s mission to acquire or create publications in Zambian languages to help sustain literacy. While our libraries do have a few books written in Zambian languages, there are simply not enough of them in print. A recent grant from the eIFL Public Library Innovation Program is allowing us to fill the gap by engaging youth and reading teachers in Zambia to create programs that run on our OLPC XO laptops (and other platforms) to teach reading in the children’s first languages. These programs, which can be translated for use in other African countries and languages, will be posted online and accessible to anyone in the world.

In addition to the Zambian Languages Literacy Project, Lubuto is also focused on the preservation and promotion of Zambian stories and writers. We have a number of activities underway in support of this initiative, including efforts to produce bilingual books for children and young adults and finding and preserving out-of-print Zambian books. During the year, Lubuto volunteers made great strides in uncovering out-of-print fiction and other books, written in Zambian languages. The first round of books have been scanned and uploaded onto a new website: www.LubutoCollections.org.

Lubuto Supporters

As recognition for Lubuto has grown, we have seen increased interest from organizations and individuals around the world. One highlight of the year was a visit to the Lubuto Library in Lusaka by Anne Sinclair, respected French television journalist and wife of the Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund, Dominique Strauss-Kahn.
In April, we were honored to have world renowned actor and humanitarian Danny Glover and our founding Advisory Board member Mulenga Kapwepwe join us for a special program for a group of elementary and middle school children at the Benning Neighborhood Library in Washington DC in honor of National Library Week. Danny and Mulenga read Martin’s Big Words, and spent a couple of hours following the program, meeting the children, answering their questions and taking photos.

Danny and Mulenga also presented their reading at a fundraiser in support of Lubuto held at the Embassy of Zambia in Washington DC, hosted by Her Excellency, Ambassador Inonge Mbiikusita-Lewanika. They were introduced by James Early, Director of Cultural Heritage Policy at the Center for Folklife Programs and Cultural Studies at the Smithsonian Institution. Anne Caputo, president of the Special Libraries Association emceed the evening. The event was well attended and the film and reading well-received.

Lubuto Expansion

We continue to expand our presence in Zambia and seek financial support to respond to requests for our libraries from officials of Malawi and Rwanda. Construction on the second Lubuto library at the Ngwerere School in Lusaka’s Garden Compound is underway. The work is progressing well and we anticipate the opening late in 2010. The book collection was shipped from the U.S. thanks to assistance from our friends at the National Geographic Society and very generous support – again – from International Mailing Solutions, LLC.

We continue to work on the design, additional financing and construction details for the third Lubuto library in Nabukuyu, and we are busy cataloging the collection for that library. We are especially grateful for the very generous support of Dow Jones & Company and its employees, Oprah’s Angel Network, Marilyn Hollinshead, and our other loyal donors, who have made these two new libraries possible.

Lubuto has expanded beyond its library walls to offer enriching life experiences to vulnerable children and youth and we are committed to continuing to grow our libraries and their programs throughout sub-Saharan Africa.

I would like to thank our dedicated staff and volunteers in the U.S., Zambia and around the world for their unique and sustained efforts in making 2009 another great year. My sincere thanks to our many generous donors for their support of Lubuto and its important mission. We look forward to another successful year in 2010.

Jane Kinney Meyers
President
June 2010
Zambian sociologist and motivational speaker, Dr. Lawrence Mukuka, has designed an innovative program of counseling, mentoring and inculcation of traditional values tailored to the needs of the vulnerable children and youth that we serve. Lubuto offers this unique program with USAID support in partnership with Project Concern International. It is integrated with other library programs and open to all children.

The program uses storytelling of local and foreign tales that are selected for their instructive morals about life skills and positive mental attitude. It combines techniques that enlighten, educate, entertain, inspire, and motivate children to retell stories and discuss the morals among their peers, family and communities. Motivational Mentoring sessions are conducted in the vernacular language of the community and are based on traditional ways in which values are passed down from generation to generation. This gives the children a sense of connection to their roots and society.

Over 500 boys and girls have participated in each three-month program of weekly sessions, offered year round at Lubuto. Most of the participants are street children and all come from highly vulnerable circumstances. Following each weekly session, the children are interviewed to determine their understanding of the messages and to help them incorporate the values into their lives.
Of all the programs that Lubuto offers, Motivational Mentoring has been one of the most successful. Many of the participants become regular readers at the library and seek out additional Lubuto programs, like OLPC computers and visual arts. Dozens of the participants, many of whom live on the streets, have determined they are ready to return to school and our staff works with them to help them realize this dream. Our challenge over the coming year will be to find ways to expand funding for this program to meet the growing demand.

“ It is so extraordinary...the role that theater plays in ordinary people's lives. Just how it in some sense reinforces their sense of themselves and re-establishes a different confidence in them. Not unlike my own experiences in acting when I was young, it sets something in motion...a way to organize the emotional life within you. To watch these young people engaging in that and claiming it for themselves is very special.”

—DANNY GLOVER commenting on the film “Our Time to Bring Change” at Lubuto’s event at the Embassy of Zambia, Washington DC, April 2010
Lubuto has long recognized that children learn to read most effectively when they are taught stories written in their native languages. We have identified and added materials in Zambian languages to our core collections, however, there are an insufficient number of local-language materials available to maintain and develop fluency. To address this issue, Lubuto is pursuing several important activities.

• In partnership with the Zambia Library Association, we established the Zambian Board on Books for Young People (ZBBY) to bring together writers, illustrators, publishers and educators to produce high-quality bilingual literature for children and young adults. On behalf of Lubuto, Mulenga Kapwepwe will be helping us to expand the organization and its activities in the coming years.

• Working with the University of Zambia (UNZA), we proposed and identified a Fulbright Scholar to teach children’s literature and library services to teachers and library studies students. Mary Wagner, a professor in the Master of Library and Information Science (MLIS) program at St. Catherine University, will travel to Lusaka in October 2010 to teach at UNZA in academic year 2010-2011. One of her goals is to create a service-learning relationship between the Lubuto Library Project and the University of Zambia.
Zambian Language Reading Program

We made a significant step forward in our efforts to ensure that children are taught to read in their first languages when Lubuto was selected as one of 12 out of 350 organizations to receive a $30,000 grant from eIFL.net Public Library Innovation Initiative. The eIFL grants, funded by the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation, are for projects that encourage innovation in information technology in public libraries.

With our grant, we will train the youth who have been using the One Laptop per Child (OLPC) XO laptops in our libraries and experienced Zambian reading teachers to use an OLPC Etoys application to create early reading programs in Zambian languages. Implementation of the program is complex and requires the help of many people with diverse skills in the U.S. and Zambia. Kathleen Harness of EtoysIllinois.org at the University of Illinois Urbana-Champaign and Mike Lee of Sugar Labs DC developed the OLPC authoring tools that we will use in story writing. The Zambia Ministry of Education, the University of Zambia liaison, Ngwerere School and the two Lubuto Libraries in Zambia are providing advisory support and resources.

Our regional program director, Eleni Coromvli, recruited the teachers, with the assistance of Sweden's Maria Ronnås, a scholar of reading promotion in Zambia. Training has started; we have met with the other eIFL grant recipients in Slovenia; and we anticipate the first postings of the Zambian language Etoys reading programs by the end of 2010.

These programs will be made available on laptops in our libraries and via the LubutoCollections.org website. The open source programs will then be available for easy translation to other Bantu languages and have the potential to change the landscape of literacy programs throughout Africa.
“One of the big visions for us at Lubuto is to get these stories back to the children. They are beautiful stories, very well-written: they can be sung, they can be told, they can be narrated, they can be shared. That is part of Lubuto and we really are very much about quality as well, and giving quality, because we think every child deserves the best.”

—MULENGA KAPWEPWE, Chairperson National Arts Council of Zambia and founding Lubuto Library Advisory Board Member

Lubuto Library Project has worked to acquire and make available books and traditional stories in Zambian languages. The launch of Lubuto Collections.org marks the beginning of the realization of this important initiative. Developed by a team of students from the University of Maryland’s i-School, two collections can be accessed on the website, which was launched in the spring of 2010.

Zambian Stories

Lubuto’s volunteers are working to identify and scan Zambian stories long out of print but preserved in libraries around the world. Our site will serve as a repository for these works to inspire young readers, encourage adaptation of these traditional stories to new picture books and other uses.
The initial collection is comprised of materials found, uncataloged, in the Library of Congress’s African and Middle East Reading Room’s pamphlet files. There are 26 books and other printed works in the first collection posted on the site. Included are books of traditional Zambian stories: fiction, much of which was written for children and young adults, and some non-fiction works. This is just the beginning of our efforts to locate and provide access to these very valuable books for the use of readers and researchers world-wide.

“(An important priority is) to bring back the traditional stories, to bring back the literature in our own languages, back to the children, because they have disappeared. I’ve been totally inspired by what librarians can do. Unbeknownst to me, Lubuto volunteers had been scanning books in our local languages which were written 40 or 50 years ago. This is brilliant. I don’t even think you know what you have actually done for Zambia.”

—MULENGA KAPWEPEWE chairperson National Arts Council of Zambia and founding Lubuto Library Advisory Board Member
Martin’s Big Words is an award-winning picture book, written by Doreen Rappaport and illustrated by Bryan Collier. It tells the story of the life of Martin Luther King Jr. through Dr. King’s own words and inspired illustrations. We chose our work with this moving book as a focal point to illustrate what Lubuto Libraries do for the children and youth we serve, focusing on the rich programs that we offer that make our libraries more than just collections of great books.

One Laptop Per Child XO Laptops

Using the OLPC XO laptops at the library, some children wrote their own stories based on their reactions to Dr. King’s words.

Performing Arts

Kenneth Hau, from the acting group Barefeet, worked with the children to reenact the story of Dr. King as a performance piece. The play was filmed and shown at our event for school children in Washington DC. These young students recognized the commonality between their own lives and those of children thousands of miles away in Africa.
Visual Arts

Bryan Collier’s collage-based illustrations were a wonderful source of artistic inspiration to participants in Lubuto’s Visual Arts Program. Some children interpreted Dr. King’s words and story using their own artistic style and methods, while others honed their skills by copying Bryan’s beautiful artwork.

Motivational Mentoring

The inspiring words of Martin Luther King Jr., along with quotes from the book’s protagonist and Dr. King’s mother, naturally relate to key principals that are addressed in the Motivational Mentoring program, including purpose in life, honesty, faith, courage, perseverance, self-confidence, and responsibility. These are a few of the quotes that inspire the children:

“You are as good as anyone.”

“Hate cannot drive out hate. Only love can do that.”

“Sooner or later, all people of the world will have to discover a way to live together.”

“When history books are written, someone will say there lived black people who had the courage to stand up for their rights.”

Independent Auditors’ Report

To the Board of Directors of Lubuto Library Project, Inc.
Washington, DC

We have audited the accompanying statements of financial position of Lubuto Library Project, Inc. (a non-profit organization) as of December 31, 2009 and 2008 (restated) and the related statements of activities and cash flows for the years then ended. These financial statements are the responsibility of the Company’s management. Our responsibility is to express an opinion on these financial statements based on our audit.

We conducted our audit in accordance with auditing standards generally accepted in the United States of America. These standards require that we plan and perform the audit to obtain reasonable assurance about whether the financial statements are free of material misstatement. An audit includes examining, on a test basis, evidence supporting the amounts and disclosures in the financial statements. An audit also includes assessing the accounting principles used and significant estimates made by management, as well as evaluating the overall financial statement presentation. We believe that our audit provides a reasonable basis for our opinion.

Lubuto Library Project restated 2008 financial statement to reflect foreign bank account and correct income from donated books. As disclosed in Note 6, library construction cost was restated in 2008 as $4,943 and bank account was restated as $47,455 and income from donated books were restated as $28,583 to properly reflect net assets in 2008 financial statement.

In our opinion, the financial statements referred to above present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Lubuto Library Project, Inc. as of December 31, 2009 and 2008 (restated) and the changes in net assets and its cash flows for the years then ended in conformity with accounting principles generally accepted in the United States of America.
