Mr. Spooner

Dear Sir:

As I have a ticket for the entire course of Fowler's Phrenological lectures, one of which is to night, I must most respectfully decline your invitations with many thanks for your kindness.

In relation to other matters I would say, that towards you I feel perfectly friendly, as I do to all my acquaintances in Boston. I meet them all in the same spirit. Am glad to see them whenever they happen in my way, but never give much time or attention to any one. This is incidental to my life as a medium. My circle of friends are constantly changing, and as my time is very precious, those who know me most intimately, know how to understand me, and expect little of me beyond my public labors. Yours with the utmost good will.
