

The Royal Wives of Windsor

Monday, 9pm, ITV

A bad few weeks loom for republicans as the pre-wedding royal cheerleading begins. ITV has draped its schedules with bunting this week, including this offering - presented by Kate Williams (pictured) - profiling the women who have ventured into the House of Windsor.

Dunkirk

Friday, 12.45pm, 8pm, Sky Cinema Premiere

Christopher Nolan's second world war epic divided opinion by largely forgoing heroic narrative in favour of a visceral evocation of the experience of being cold, hungry, homesick and terrified on that beach in France in 1940. On its own terms, it's hugely effective: an uncomfortable and often disorientating viewing experience.

Jewel's Catch One

Available from

Tuesday, Netflix

Catch One in Los Angeles was, by all accounts, a brilliant, celebrity-strewn, ahead-of-its-time nightclub. But thanks to its remarkable founder, Jewel Thais-Williams, it was much more than that. Described as "the Studio 54 of the West Coast", this gay nightspot also became a hub of community activism and resistance to racism, sexism and homophobia. This doc tells its story.

Taskmaster

Wednesday, 9pm, Dave

The entertainingly daft gameshow returns for a sixth series. The USP is bewildering and pointless tasks - towers of lemons, wheelbarrow stunts etc - attempted by game, silly comics including Liza Tarbuck, Russell Howard and Asim Chaudhry.
