FOREWORD

The Margaret Chase Smith Library is a Congressional research library and archives which houses the papers, political memorabilia, documents and honors stemming from the thirty-two year career in Congress of former United States Senator Margaret Chase Smith. Located on fifteen picturesque acres overlooking the banks of the Kennebec River in Senator Smith's hometown of Skowhegan, Maine, the Library was built under the auspices of Northwood University in Midland, Michigan, contiguously to her residence and dedicated in August of 1982. Since 2012, it has operated under the auspices of the University of Maine. Opened to researchers in 1983, the facility stands as a worthy tribute to Margaret Chase Smith's integrity, high standards and to her major contributions to United States History.

This guide to the Margaret Chase Smith Papers provides scholars with an overview of the collection. Additional assistance will be provided individuals upon their arrival at the Library.

MARGARET CHASE SMITH A BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH

One of the outstanding twentieth century American political leaders is a woman from Maine. Margaret Chase Smith advanced from local political activities in Maine to the highest levels of national and world-wide politics. Her political career was a masterpiece of achievement. It greatly influenced the course for women as they aspired to public service.

On December 14, 1897, Margaret Chase was born in the small, mill town of Skowhegan, Maine. She was the eldest of the six children of George Emery Chase and Carrie Murray Chase. Her mother had worked in a local factory prior to her marriage. Her father was a barber.

Like many families of that era, the Chases had to struggle to provide their children with the necessities of life. Carrie often worked outside the home in a local store, a shoe factory and as a waitress in the Coburn Hotel. Margaret fondly recalled how her parents kept the family together in spite of hard times. The Chases fostered hard work and self-reliance in their children, but there were few indications that their eldest child would become an international figure. Margaret Chase Smith's story is all the more remarkable because of its inauspicious beginnings.

As a girl and a young woman, Margaret worked in a five-and-ten-cent store, did tax work in the town selectmen's office, taught briefly in a one-room school, worked as a telephone operator and on the local newspaper. She was one of the founders and charter members of the Skowhegan Business and Professional Women's Club. While she was business manager of a major textile mill in Skowhegan, Margaret fell in love with Clyde H. Smith, a prominent local and state politician. In 1930, they married. With Margaret's help, Clyde was elected to the United States House of Representatives from Maine's Second Congressional District in 1936. From 1936 to 1940, Margaret served as Clyde's office manager, chief campaign organizer, and executive assistant.

Despite a serious heart ailment, Clyde campaigned for re-election in 1940. He suffered a fatal attack in April of that year after appealing to his constituents to elect his wife should he be unable to continue his campaign. As a result of Clyde's death, Margaret was faced with running in a special primary to fill her husband's unexpired term; a special election; the regular primary and the general election. Four campaigns in five months seemed an insurmountable task but Margaret Chase Smith beat the odds and won election to the U.S. House of Representatives in September, 1940. She subsequently won re-election in 1942, 1944, and 1946.

As a Congresswoman, Representative Smith established a reputation for honesty and integrity. Her greatest achievement in the House was her success in obtaining permanent status for women in the military. Because of her efforts on behalf of nurses in the far Pacific during World War II and her fight to secure permanent status, Margaret Chase Smith inaccurately has been called the "Mother of the WAVES." She earned great respect from women in the military for her unending support of their cause.

In 1948, Margaret Chase Smith decided to run for the United States Senate. This was a daring decision for Representative Smith. No woman had been elected to the Senate in her own right. Margaret faced formidable opposition in the Republican primary in the persons of a popular sitting Governor and also a former Governor of Maine. She was giving up a safe seat in the House in order to run a campaign in which she lacked the support of the Maine State Republican Party. Nevertheless, her determination brought an election victory which won her the attention and respect of Maine and the Nation. Her margin of victory in the primary exceeded the total votes garnered by her powerful opponents combined. She easily defeated the Democratic nominee in the general election.

During the 1948 campaign, a young man named William C. Lewis, Jr. served as Representative Smith's campaign manager. Lewis became her executive assistant in the Senate and remained her closest aide and confidante until his death in 1982. Lewis, a Major General in the Air Force Reserves and an attorney, was an astute political observer. He ably assisted Senator Smith during her twenty-four years in the Senate.

Margaret Chase Smith served Maine and her country during the administrations of six Presidents from Franklin D. Roosevelt through Richard M. Nixon's first term. During that time, she adhered to a two-pronged philosophy that became her political trademark. She maintained a steadfast belief that a member of Congress should remain on the job while Congress was in session. Reflecting this belief, she held the all-time roll call voting record in the Senate until 1981 with 2,941 consecutive roll call votes. The second part of her philosophy was a refusal to spend large amounts of money on her re-election campaigns. This frugality earned her wide approval among her constituents and was a factor in her unprecedented vote totals in election after election.

Throughout her political career, Senator Smith maintained an interest in military affairs. She made significant contributions to the nation's security through her work on the House Naval Affairs Committee, the Senate Armed Services Committee and various subcommittees. Eventually, Margaret Chase Smith became the ranking Republican on the Senate Armed Services Committee. She also served on the powerful Appropriations Committee.

In spite of her legislative accomplishments, Senator Smith admits that her greatest contribution to the country's well-being was her consistent stand against bigotry and injustice. Her opposition to the excesses of "McCarthyism" in the early 1950s demonstrated to the nation her courage and devotion to conscience and justice. In her own words, she said:

"If I am to be remembered in history, it will not be because of legislative accomplishments, but for an act I took as a legislator in the U.S. Senate when on June 1, 1950, I spoke . . . in condemnation of McCarthyism when the junior Senator from Wisconsin had the Senate paralyzed with fear that he would purge any Senator who disagreed with him. That speech is known as the 'Declaration of Conscience.'"

The Declaration of Conscience was the beginning of the end of Joseph McCarthy. However, it caused Senator Smith to feel the full brunt of McCarthy's vengeance. He dropped her from a key investigation subcommittee even though such action ran contrary to Senate tradition. McCarthy also attempted to defeat Senator Smith during her 1954 re-election campaign. The voters of Maine refused to be influenced by outsiders and they returned Margaret for her second of four Senate terms.

In 1954, Senator Smith organized and personally financed a trip to twenty-three countries around the world in order to become better informed of conditions in a rapidly changing post-war world. She personally met and conferred with leaders such as Churchill, DeGaulle, Adenauer, Franco, Nasser, U Nu, Molotov and Chiang Kai-shek. This trip, filmed by Edward R. Murrow, helped to establish Senator Smith as a respected world leader in her own right.

Among the many firsts in Senator Smith's career was her re-election campaign in 1960. For the first time in American politics, two women opposed each other for a seat in the Senate. Margaret Chase Smith defeated Lucia Cormier in a campaign characterized by dignity and integrity on both sides. It was not until 1986 that two women again sought the same Senate seat.

During the 1952 and 1956 Presidential campaigns, Margaret Chase Smith received consideration as a possible Vice-Presidential candidate. In the fall of 1963, however, her name surfaced as a suggested candidate for the Presidency. After discussing the matter with General Lewis, Senator Smith decided to seek the Republican nomination for President of the United States. On January 27, 1964, she launched her campaign that went all the way to the Republican convention in San Francisco that summer. She finished with 27 committed delegates and a great many vocal supporters. Although she did not win, she became the first woman in U.S. history to have her name placed in nomination for the Presidency by a major political party.

Margaret Chase Smith was one of the original members of the Senate committee which dealt with space exploration. So active was she in the U.S. space program that the director of NASA said, "If it were not for a woman, Margaret Chase Smith, we never would have placed a man on the moon."

Of all of her legislative achievements, Senator Smith regards her efforts in support of medical research to be of prime importance. In 1955, she spearheaded a five-year, five-billion-dollar program for the expansion of medical research. This program resulted in a remarkable increase in research on college and university campuses.

Following her retirement from politics in 1973, Margaret Chase Smith became a visiting lecturer under the auspices of the Woodrow Wilson National Fellowship Foundation. For three years she met with college students and discussed problems facing the nation.

In the summer of 1989 she received the highest honor this Nation can confer on a citizen. President George Bush presented her with the Presidential Medal of Freedom in ceremonies at the White House. In July of 1990, the General Federation of Women's Clubs awarded Senator Smith the prestigious Woman of Achievement in Government Award in New York City. At a Margaret Chase Smith Day ceremony in her hometown of Skowhegan, Senator Smith received the Citizen of the Year Award from the National Conference on Citizenship which was to have been presented by President Ronald Reagan in 1986. These and countless other awards can be seen in the museum portion of the Margaret Chase Smith Library in Skowhegan.

The years following her retirement from the Senate saw great numbers of honors conferred on Senator Smith as she received recognition from all over the country as well as from the people of Maine and Skowhegan. In 1991, she received her ninety-fifth honorary doctoral degree, conferred on her by Colby College of Maine, having received her 93rd and 94th degrees from Muhlenberg College of Allentown, Pennsylvania, and Maine Maritime Academy.

Margaret Chase Smith passed away on Memorial Day--Monday, May 29, 1995.
