L.A. Dance Project Production Support by Nathan Shreeve, Director of Production, Chris Tynan, Director of Operations and Technology, Alisa Wyman, Tour and Production Manager.
With Crowd, you are continuing your examination of our fantasmatic universe and the relationship between art and the sacred, something that has characterized your productions from the very beginning. However, isn't this the first time that you are dealing with this subject in its collective dimension, and with such a large number of performers?

Up until The Pyre (2013) my pieces, regardless of the number of performers, have largely been about private space and superimposed intimacies through persons who are often rather isolated. Now, after The Ventriloquists Convention (2015), this is the second time that I'm depicting a group whose social activity and interactions play a central role. This group is certainly very different from that of the ventriloquists' convention, since it's a group of young people who have come together out of a desire for feelings of euphoria and out of a common interest in a musical genre, techno. The context chosen is that of a party. The staging of the group fits in nicely with the question of intimacy and its relation to the group, and the relationship between individual and collective emotions.

From the very beginning I've been interested in questions raised by sociologists, anthropologists, and philosophers on the relationship between the artistic and the religious and especially those thoughts and emotions which are improper, of their spaces of expression - archaic and contemporary, actual and potential. Whether it be eroticism, death, or violence, for example, these are issues that concern each of us and can disturb us, and might even jeopardize the community, depending on the way in which they are experienced.

With Crowd, there are often exhilarating aspects and outlets of expression of intensified emotions that develop through desire and the complex longing for love. The persons who go to this party, and thus form a community, are prepared to experience particularly intense emotions of any kind, and reach a state where their senses are already very much heightened. The group becomes excited by a piece where the structure and certain behaviors evoke various rituals. In the face of this emotional rollercoaster, the audience can likewise enter into a physical and emotional rapport with the piece.

What kind of place does music have in this work?

Peter Rehberg, who possesses an excellent knowledge of electronic music, proposed a number of tracks and on the basis of those I arrived at a selection for Crowd. He then did detailed work for the final mix.

I find it interesting that this selection in fact has a genuine historical relevance, since it’s made up of records that are important for the history of electronic dance music - works by musicians that are significant for the Detroit scene, among others, with Jeff Mills and other people from Underground Resistance, plus Manuel Göttsching, for example. The aim was to create a mix that covers an entire range of essential sounds that has been exciting for us over the last forty years. Besides these tracks, which are used over the greater part of the production, there’s also an original piece composed by KTL (Stephen O'Malley and Peter Rehberg) and another by Peter Rehberg on his own.

And what is the role of Dennis Cooper's text? You yourself have talked of a “subtext”...

The pieces - as is the world itself - are made up of different layers of texts, though not entirely. Language is not located solely in the realm of audibility. In Jerk (2008) the actor speaks throughout the entire play; with I Apologize (2004) very similar issues arise, although the same actor does not say a single word from the beginning to the very end. What Dennis Cooper and I have been passionate about, right from the start of our long collaboration, is the attempt with each project to reinvent new relationships to the text, to language, to speech, and to narration, and new ways of writing for the stage.

The “subtext” of Crowd is a text that is not audible but is partly intelligible. In Crowd, the fifteen dancers also constitute individual personae whose psychologies, imaginations, feelings, and histories are in each case very different. When you’re observing a party, there’s a huge number of “stories” that are unfolding right before your eyes; in Crowd there are histories and portraits of persons that Dennis has developed based on work done with the actors, which refines and influences the creation of the piece. This aspect of the piece brings to mind the process of mixing in music. It involves a mixing of narrations, as though you have fifteen different music tracks and you’re adjusting their respective volume levels, and thus a composition that allows the audience to have a key role in the way in which they will see and experience the piece.
This dissociation of the various planes - dream vs. reality, real vs. fantasy - that produces a feeling of time distortion is another characteristic of your work.

Crowd has a very rich formal potential. One of the central components of this type of piece occurs by way of the multiple stylization of the movements and their montage. This is not an imitation of the movements reworked, but a very intimate interpretation guided by the emotions and the intentions that can motivate the performers, their attentiveness, and their greater reception of what is unfolding around them. I likewise work with subdivisions - at certain points the dancers are going to all be in the same type of stylization, a common language, and at others they will be in a different type of gesture. This creates a very rich range of rhythmical and musical vibrations resulting in a slightly altered perception that is somewhat reminiscent of a hallucinatory or hypnotic feeling, and still producing meaning. In fact, this musical and choreographic work itself allows a narrative work to be created. This play of rhythms provokes a very strong feeling of time distortion. These distortions are highly dynamic, while simultaneously stretching time, making it possible to observe the persons and situations from close-up, and to dissect their actions in detail. Various temporalities are superimposed, through the same movements, but also in their relationship to the music and lighting, whose relationship to time varies almost constantly.
PERFORMERS BIOGRAPHIES

Massimo Fusco. Born in 1986, living in France. Massimo Fusco studied contemporary dance at the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique et de Danse of Paris. As a dancer, he collaborated with Jean-Claude Gallotta, Annabelle Bonnely & François Deneulind, Hervé Robbe, Sarah Crépin & Etienne Cuppens, Joanne Leighton, Clédat & Petitpierre, Alban Richard, Mélanie Perrier, Christian Rizzo, Dominique Brun, and Gisèle Vienne with whom he performed all around the world. He danced in the movie Le Bal des actrices directed by Maiwenn, and he is one of the characters of If it were love directed by Patric Chiha, Teddy Award-winning at the Berlinale 2020. As a choreographer, he is interested in Performance Art and he completed a university degree of art, dance and performance art. Since then, he uses improvisation’s skills as a motor for creativity and composition in order to create more transversality between Arts. Certified as a Tui Na massage practitioner, he sets out to connect danse and somatic methods in an immersive sound installation : CORPS SONORES.

Vincent Dupuy. Sports were a big part of his childhood including 10 years of artistic gymnastics and later on dance classes. In 2013, he joined the National Conservatory of Music and Dance in Paris and met many different artists. He trained there as a contemporary dancer from his 16 to his 19 and obtained his DNPSPD (Professional National Diploma of Dance Performer). When he finished, he became the 2016 winner of ADAMI Talents and participated in the revival of ‘May B’, emblematic piece of contemporary dance, within the Compagnie Maguy Marin. He collaborates for 5 years as director and choreographer of the Arthésic Company, young theatre collective, leading to 4 creations in collaboration with Matthieu Carrani (adaptation of Manque by Sarah Kane (2017), original creation Asile (2018) and Charlie (2019) and adaptation of Bleu de Thury by Malika Bey Durif (2020)). Since 2017 Vincent has been performing in A New Landscape by Hervé Robbe, in Catherine Legrand re-creation of Dominique Bagouet’s So Schnell and in Crow and Kindertotenlieder by Gisèle Vienne. In September 2021 he founded the Cie Atlas to develop his own choreographic work and his first creation Infra (2024). He is currently performing in the solo Fuglane directed by Hélène Rocheteau and dances in the piece Stabat Mater by Pauline Bayard.

Henrietta Wallberg. Henrietta Wallberg, born in 1990 in Göteborg, Sweden, is a dancer, performance artist and actress, working in Sweden, Denmark and France. Since 2009, she has worked within a wide spectra of the international art scene, moving between dancing, singing and acting on stage. Henrietta has performed within diverse artistic expressions as 1800th century opera, as well as avant garde performance art in Stockholm. Over the years, Henrietta has continuously collaborated with the Swedish choreographer and director Charlotte Engelkes, member of Sasha Waltz and Guests. Together, they have dug into the world of Wagner and created the multi art performances Flying Dutchmen and Lohengrin Dreams, which they performed at Radialsystem V, Berlin, and Helsingborgs stadsteater, Helsingborg. Henrietta has performed on stages such as Stockholms Stadsteater, Norrlands Opera in Umeå, Centre Pompidou in Paris, ROHM Theatre in Kyoto, Guangzhou Opera House in Canton and Sadler’s Wells in London. Since 2016, Henrietta is part of the Compagnie Gisèle Vienne. Starting in 2017, Henrietta has toured with the performances Crowd and The Ventriuloquists Convention in Europe, Asia and South America. From 2022, Henrietta is also touring the theatre piece L’Etang, based on the novel Der Teich, by the Swiss author Robert Walser, and directed by Vienne. Henrietta is educated at The Royal Swedish Ballet School in Stockholm, and graduated from there in 2009.

Oskar Landström is based in Stockholm and has been working as a freelancing dancer since 2009. He has worked with choreographers such as Cristina Caprioli, Björn Säfsten, Sebastian Matthias, Malin Elgán, Mia Habib, Ingrid Fiksdal and Anne Imhof. Oskar premiered his first creation with Gisèle Vienne in 2017 with the production Crowd.
Philip Berlin was born in 1991, he works as a freelancer in the field of dance and choreography in Sweden and internationally. Philip has shown choreographic works at Théâtre de la Ville, Scenkonstmuseet, Dansens Hus, and in collaboration with Louisa Dahl, at Moderna Museet and MDT in Stockholm. Since 2013 Philip has collaborated regularly with Cristina Caprioli. In 2014 Philip initiated together with Ulrika Berg, Anna Grip, and Cristina Caprioli the project SUNDAY RUN UP - a context that brings together artists working in literature, choreography, music, and art. Philip has worked with CCN Ballet de Lorraine in France where he danced in works by Merce Cunningham, Mathilde Monnier, William Forsythe, Tero Saarinen, and Maria La Ribot, among others. He has also worked with companies such as Norrlands and Cullbergbalett/Riksteatern. Since 2016, he has regularly taught at the Stockholm School of the Arts.

Sophie Demeyer lives and works in Paris. She began her training at Montpellier CNR, continued her studies in Angers at Centre National De la Danse. Since 2006, she worked with Annie Vigier & Franck apertet (Cie les gens d'uterpan), Thibaud Croisy, Julien Prévieux, Geisha Fontaine et Pierre Cottreau, and more recently Mathilde Monnier cie. She met and started working with Gisèle Vienne in 2016. She also works as a comedian in the short and feature films of the directors Lora Mure Ravaud, Patric Chiha, River, Damien Manivel, Georgia Azoulay.

Katia Petrowick. Born in 1986, Katia Petrowick is a French artist. Since 2007, she has also worked as a performer and/or assistant with choreographers and directors: Mariën Breuker, Stéphanie Chêne, Eric Senen, Dominique Boivin and Dominique Rebaud, Luc Petton, Kataline Patkai, Stéphanie Constantin, Estelle Clareton, Bérénice Legrand, Clémentine Vanlerberghe, Elodie Sicard, Louise Vanneste. In 2015, she joined the Gisèle Vienne company for the recreation of I Apologize, Kindertotenlieder and the creation CROWD.

Marine Chesnais. Born in 1988, she lives in Groix, island in Brittany. Passionated by the sea and our relationship with nature she created the company ONE BREATH in 2017 and developed the notion of bio-inspired dance. Her latest choreographic piece Habiter Le Seuil is currently touring in France and abroad. The movie of the same name accompanying the performance was selected in various international cinema festival. The premiere was in April 2022 at the festival HOTDOCS in Toronto, Canada.

As a performer she collaborates with Gisèle Vienne since 2016.

Sylvain Decloitre. After studying at the Paris Conservatoire, Sylvain Decloitre performed with various artists such as Olivier Dubois, Jean-Claude Gallotta, Gerard and Kelly, Nile Koetting, Dennis Cooper and Zac Farley... He started to collaborate with Gisèle Vienne by joining the team of the piece Kindertotenlieder in 2016 and continues with Crowd since 2017.

Jonathan Schatz is a dancer and choreographer, living in Brussels, born in France in 1984. After studying at the École de l'Opéra national de Paris, he studied at the CNSMD in Lyon, the CNDC in Angers and the Fondation Royaumont under the direction of Myriam Gourfink. Since 2009 he has been a performer with Gisèle Vienne and has worked with several choreographers, including Marianne Baillot, Thibaud le Maguer, Dominique Brun, Philippe Saire, Pierre Droulers, Claudia Sorace and Riccardo Fazi. Since 2011, through his research into trance, ritual and perception, he has been developing a hybrid work at the edge of disciplines, in immersive devices bringing together and dialoguing various artistic media such as sculpture, experimental music and digital art. From 2016 onwards, he has been associated with Les Bains, laboratories for the exploration of the amplified hypnotic tool, conceived by Catherine Contour, and participates in some of the creations resulting from this research, such as Suites Japonaises, une plage en Chartreuse in June 2019. Today he is starting Kodama, a research/creation project resulting from the laboratory initiated by Catherine Contour on the use of the hypnotic tool for creation. He is performing in Crowd, This is how you will disappear and Kindertotenlieder by Gisèle Vienne.
Rehin Hollant. After graduating in theater and dance studies Rehin graduated from the CNDC in Angers in 2013, under the direction of Emmanuelle Huynh. There she studied the works of Trisha Brown, Kô Murobushi, Trajal Harrel, Lia Rodrigues, Julie Nioche etc. She dances for Danyan Hammoud who created for her the solo 14 tours at the Ballet du Nord. Since 2017 she is touring with Crowd by Gisèle Vienne. She joined various works by Amélie Poirier for Les Nouveaux Ballets, the Brussels based company Droit dans le mur with Lurent Plumhans, and recently the company Nour in Nantes. She reconnected with acting by shooting in If it were love directed by Patric Chiha, Un homme Heureux directed by Tristan Séguéla and for Ruben Alves in Escort Boys. She defines herself as an actress, dancer and performer across the disciplines.

Nicolas Bos and Benjamin Millepied met in 2012, as Millepied was founding L.A. Dance Project, and shared an artistic affinity that has led to a decade long partnership between the choreographer and the High Jewelry Maison.

Inspired by their mutual passion for extraordinary craftsmanship and skill in the arts, these bonds have seen the creation of both dance works and jewelry collections. To mark the creation of Millepied’s “Romeo & Juliet Suite”, which premiered in Paris in September 2022, Van Cleef & Arpels released the Romeo & Juliet High Jewelry collection in 2019, in which the fate of the star-crossed lovers plays out in precious stones.

In 2021, L.A. Dance Project paid homage to Nicolas Bos in recognition of his friendship, commitment, and dedication to the art of dance, at their annual Gala. During the performance portion of the evening, Millepied surprised Bos with the premiere of Pillar V, a new work choreographed as a gift to his friend and artistic partner.

Since 2021, the L.A. Dance Project has been supported by Dance Reflections by Van Cleef & Arpels, the Maison's new initiative towards contemporary dance.

“Dance has been a significant field for the Maison throughout its history, with examples that include the encounter between Claude Arpels and George Balanchine in the 1960s, the partnership with Benjamin Millepied's L.A. Dance Project (LADP), collaborations with various companies and operas across the world and the FEDORA - Van Cleef & Arpels Prize for Ballet. In 2020, we wished to take things a step further by uniting our activities in this domain. With the program Dance Reflections by Van Cleef & Arpels, the Maison aims to support modern and contemporary dance, and encourage new choreography.”

Nicolas Bos
President and CEO of Van Cleef & Arpels

“Dance brings all the artistic disciplines together: it can incorporate music, the plastic arts, costume, lighting, set design, graphic design and even jewelry. It is a fascinating art form and an incredible field of expression. That is why it can appeal to such a wide audience. I’d like to encourage spectators to admire the works freely, with no preconceptions.”

Serge Laurent
Van Cleef & Arpels' Director of Dance and Culture Program
ABOUT LADP

Co-founded by choreographer Benjamin Millepied in 2012, L.A. Dance Project (LADP) has become an incubator for possibility in Los Angeles. The company has found a true home in DTLA with the opening of the 224S performance space in 2017, for audiences and artists alike.

LADP programming includes daring new commissions with an emphasis on cross-genre collaborations, revivals of choreographic masterpieces, new works from local emerging artists, and educating young dancers from LA's most economically under-resourced communities.

LADP is committed to reaching a broad audience and making dance accessible to the communities it serves. LADP keeps ticket prices low, offers student discounts, and hosts free of charge dress rehearsals with the goal of ensuring members of the public are not excluded due to their economic status.

Throughout the year, LADP provides free behind-the-scenes access to its rehearsal process through open rehearsals and question-and-answer sessions with the artists. These initiatives, plus the company’s core programming, help LADP fulfill its mission to inspire, create, educate, and change perspectives through the transformative power of dance in Los Angeles and around the world.

ABOUT DANCE REFLECTIONS BY VAN CLEEF & ARPELS

A devotee of dance ever since its origins, the Maison is today strengthening its commitment to the arts with Dance Reflections by Van Cleef & Arpels.

Guided by the values of creation, transmission and education, this initiative aims to uphold the artists and institutions that showcase the modern and contemporary choreographic repertoire, while encouraging new productions. Since fall 2020, the Maison has been supporting diverse performances at festivals, as well as several companies for their future creations. A major annual event will come along with these partnerships in the field of dance.

The initiative Dance Reflections by Van Cleef & Arpels marks a new chapter in the history of the Maison’s ties with the world of dance. Developed in collaboration with partners from across the world, the program expresses Van Cleef & Arpels’ desire to support the choreographic heritage, nourish contemporary creation and bring this artistic universe to the widest possible audience.

Finally, Dance Reflections by Van Cleef & Arpels aims to raise the general public’s awareness of the history and culture of dance. Committed to the values of transmission and education, the Maison plans to complement its annual event with a cultural program, intended for both professionals and amateurs: it will offer film screenings retracing the history of dance, lecture series, master classes presented by the artists and workshops open to all.
