LOSADA

Aceitunas Losada is a family owned business that has produced table olives in Carmona, Spain, near Seville for over 50 years.

Losada controls the entire process from hand harvest in their own olive groves to curing. This is a big difference from most other olive producers, as usually they are just industries that cure and pack the olives without any control on the olive growing and production. This ensures that we have even the most hard to grow olives available all through the year, even if there is a bad crop.

EL FLOJO

We found this producer when we were told about the quality of their olives at a stall in Sanlúcar de Barrameda (Cádiz) market.

We tracked them down, and we have been working together ever since. In our opinion their manzanilla olives are the best ones we have tried, and their “campesina” recipe is stunning as well.

CALCULATING THE COSTS OF OLIVES

Some olives come with a number: This is the number of olives (stone in) that on average a drained kg contains. The smaller the number the larger the olives. In Spain we tend to use these numbers for the olives which vary more on size: gordal and manzanilla.

Pitted olives jars or tins contain the same number of olives, than stone in jars or tins of the same volume. But as the pit has been removed they weigh less. This is important for retail purposes but not that much for caterers, as you sell olives by volume rather than weight
