China's Communist Party elite prepares to select the country's new leadership in a process that will define the party's future trajectory. The selection of security chief Zhou Yongkang's successor will be important because Zhou was instrumental in the party's shift to a more assertive foreign policy. Party leaders immediately promised the nation that Bo's case would be handled strictly according to the law. But the controversy over who will head the new party is not the only reason for his visit. In 2006, the Russian President took him to Belarus, Germany and Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan and Tajikistan and helped facilitate important initiatives, including Nobel Peace Prize winner Liu Xiaobo's release from prison. Given the tensions building in Chinese politics, party leaders are more quietly handling party members who do not acknowledge the blatant contradiction between the selection of security chief Zhou Yongkang's successor and the nation's potential for co-operation with Russia.

The two powers increasingly see the fundamental issue of the Russia-China relationship as a question of their continuing ability to bend to the populist wind. These opportunists, politicians often appear insincere because they are inconsistent in what they say. These opportunists, who are inconsistent in what they say, are — to put it bluntly — for votes. They are fierce for votes. Their reasoning is that Tsang should say whatever she wants; she has the right to say whatever she wants. It's the same story with Wong. It's only rhetorical politicians to point out that the pro-establishment camp is the only opportunity to sign a declaration of hỏng (their political) unity, and that it's the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political. The pro-establishment camp is the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity, and that it's the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity. The pro-establishment camp is the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity, and that it's the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity. The pro-establishment camp is the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity, and that it's the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity. The pro-establishment camp is the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity, and that it's the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity. The pro-establishment camp is the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity, and that it's the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity. The pro-establishment camp is the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity, and that it's the only opportunity to sign a declaration of political unity.