The Jesuit Way
... at Fordham

Go forth and set the world on fire!

ST. IGNATIUS LOYOLA
You are invited to be transformed.

Above all else, the primary mission of Fordham University is to transform for the better the life of each and every one of its students.

This is because Fordham believes, in a larger sense, in the transformation of the world through God’s redeeming love: one heart, one mind, one soul, one student at a time.
But, you might ask, from where does that mission come? And in what form does that transformation take place?

Fordham’s mission to transform the lives of others and, in turn, the world is embedded in Fordham’s great history and fostered by its heritage, both of which are rooted in the longstanding tenets and traditions of the Society of Jesus, otherwise simply known as the Jesuits.

Fordham invites you to engage in this transformation and to embrace all that has underscored the transformation of so many students and members of the Fordham family since the founding of our school in 1841.

“The mission of the Society of Jesus ... is a mission rooted in the belief that a new world of justice, love and peace needs educated persons of competence, conscience and compassion, men and women who are ready to embrace and promote all that is fully human, who are committed to working for the freedom and dignity of all peoples, and who are willing to do so in cooperation with others equally dedicated to the reform of society and its structures.”

“Ignatian Pedagogy: A Practical Approach” (A 1993 statement of principles for Jesuit education around the globe)
A Living Tradition Begins

St. Ignatius Loyola, Founder of the Jesuits

In 1491, in the Basque country of northeastern Spain, Iñigo Lopez de Oñaz y Loyola was born. The youngest of 13 children, Ignatius hardly knew his mother who tragically passed away when he was a child. His father died when he was 16, leaving Ignatius to discern his own gifts and talents, and thus create a path on which his life would continue.

In the spring of 1521, Ignatius suffered a debilitating leg injury in a battle with the French. The image he had of himself as a handsome and fashionable courtier was forever changed.

Then 30 years old, convalescing and uncertain of his future, Ignatius discovered new wisdom within books. The only reading material available was an illustrated life of Jesus Christ and a book detailing the life stories of many Christian saints.

Inspired by the wisdom he found in Christ’s teachings, Ignatius undertook a new spiritual journey. With a strong reliance on contemplation, Ignatius found the critical link to action. And in 1540, with a small group of friends, he founded the Society of Jesus: “contemplatives in action.”

Ignatius’ followers quickly built a reputation as scholars and teachers. Students from all over Europe flocked to the burgeoning Jesuit schools. As his original companions traveled the globe, they opened schools and colleges where there had been none before. By 1600, there were 245 schools.
Living the Vision

Since the earliest days of the Society of Jesus, Jesuits have grounded their lives and their labors in a set of spiritual practices formulated by Ignatius himself.

Eventually known as the Spiritual Exercises, these guiding directives were designed to help them cultivate a deep sense of personal mission and prepare them to put their imaginations to work in the service of God, the Church, and the wider world.

All that they strived to do each and every day of their lives was intended to be initiated and completed for the Greater Glory of God (Ad Maiorem Dei Gloriam).

Around the globe and throughout the centuries, Ignatius’ distinctive spiritual practices have given ongoing vision and meaningful direction to the lives of more than a hundred thousand Jesuits.

Moreover, people without number, both within and outside of Catholicism, have drawn sustenance and renewed spiritual energies from Ignatius’ insights and wisdom.

Within years of their humble beginnings, Jesuits established numerous educational institutions which would eventually spread and flourish the world over as they gave practical direction to ideals articulated in Ignatius’ Exercises.

Today, the educational experience at Fordham University is grounded in the very same Jesuit tradition that first began with Ignatius and his initial companions and continues to this very day with the ongoing works of their modern successors and collaborators.
Engaging the World

Saint Ignatius, as he would later become known, believed that life was a constant interplay between action and reflection, work and prayer, doing and knowing. He maintained that you learn best when you are actively engaged in the learning process which Fordham’s mission statement aptly describes as the Discovery of Wisdom.

Here at Fordham, we celebrate those intellectual and interior discoveries which will enable you to grasp ever more complex realities, embrace their significance in your life and thus engage you more effectively with an increasingly diverse and dynamic world.

Such active and ongoing seeking and searching also encourage each individual to press beyond the frontiers of intellectual growth.

Extending an Invitation

As a person with a unique set of God-given attributes and abilities, you are invited to refine not only your mind, but also your sense of self-understanding. You are called to become more fully prepared to enrich the world through your talents and professional accomplishments—whether in the realm of public service or business, media or ministry, healthcare, education, the arts, or beyond.

This invitation is continuously extended to the entire Fordham community—students, faculty, staff, alumni, people of all backgrounds and faith traditions, as well as those with no religious formation or identity. For our students especially, we feel strongly that these years in your life are about discovering what you believe and finding where you belong.

It is an invitation that encourages you to become who you are and what you are called to be. This powerful invitation, deeply rooted in the Jesuit tradition, comes from the heart of God, that quiet Voice within each one of us.
As we strive together to live our lives “for the Greater Glory of God,” a phrase which the Jesuits crafted carefully as one of their identifying hallmarks, St. Ignatius insists that we remain flexible and ready to adapt ourselves to the everchanging times, places, circumstances and events in our lives. In this spirit, a Jesuit education at Fordham is a living tradition and an ongoing journey.

Yet there are some elements common to all Jesuit schools as established throughout the world. To these shared yet distinctive characteristics, we now turn.

Defining the Jesuit Way of Educating

Caring for the Whole Person

Jesuit education is grounded in the conviction that one's full education consists of more than just intellectual development. While it is possible to grow intellectually without engaging in moral reflection or taking stock of one's emotional responses to new information and new ways of understanding, such an approach is ultimately lacking. For without serious moral engagement and attention to one's deepest desires, intellectual achievement alone becomes stale; it lacks the power to effect real transformation by bringing meaningful direction to one's life.

St. Ignatius experienced God not as distant and removed but as a caring teacher personally involved with his life, eliciting in him new hopes and bold desires, gently instructing him in the ways of prayer. Similarly, St. Ignatius wanted those involved in his schools to care for each student personally, always attentive to the particular needs and talents of each person. Such care for each and every student entrusted to our care became known simply as cura personalis.

Cared for and challenged as the unique individual you are, Fordham invites you to go beyond learning just academic content and to embrace true wisdom in the context of careful moral consideration as you engage in a process of searching self-reflection that will add needed dimension to your life and focus to your decisions.

Encouraging Ongoing Discernment

Ignatius also believed that the practice of making informed choices and thoughtfully reflecting on their consequences, great and small, was crucial to living a life shaped by a sense of vocation. We are most likely to recognize and respond to God's call, Ignatius suggested, when we are most mindful of our motivations and most attentive to our aspirations. Consequently, in his Spiritual Exercises he emphasized a practice known as discernment.

Discernment requires an individual to sift persistently through thoughts, emotions, and desires and, in so doing, to come to understand what generates a sense of internal passion and fulfillment in contrast to what leads toward apathy and emptiness. When discernment becomes an everyday habit, it both disposes us to make effective, fruitful decisions and bestows invaluable perspective on how our particular gifts might best be put at the service of a greater good.
Striving for Excellence: the Magis

This leads to another foundational principle that Ignatius imparted to Jesuit education: the magis, the more. Seeking the magis means always reaching for creative new horizons in the service of God and the service of others. It means putting our imaginations to work for the good of the world and learning how to be more magnanimous towards others, more selfless and more generous with our talents and gifts. It means that the good we do for others becomes the standard against which we measure all our efforts.

“In following what St. Ignatius teaches us, the main element ... is to learn to be magnanimous. What does being magnanimous mean? It means having a great heart, having greatness of mind; it means having great ideals, the wish to do great things to respond to what God asks of us.”

Pope Francis
(from his address to students of Jesuit institutions)

Thus, the magis principle inspires a distinctive commitment to advancing justice in the world. Jesuit education aims to form men and women for and with others—persons who not only use their talents for the greater good, but who are also committed to standing in solidarity with the poor, the oppressed, the marginalized and with all whose human dignity is ignored, imperiled, or diminished.

Far from an abstract or overly idealistic goal, the promotion of justice in our world should compel us all to act justly in our daily lives—in our relationships and our work—so as to be able to rise and meet the many daunting challenges that undermine human dignity in our day and age. Jesuits refer to such a perspective on life as living a faith that does justice.
Finding God in All Things

Finally, Jesuit education strongly encourages your “finding God in all things.”

This principle arises from the world-affirming perspective given to us by Ignatius who believed that every aspect of human life was a portal through which an individual could be drawn into a deeper, more affective and experiential relationship with God.

Jesuit schools are fitting places to help us find God in all things. Students take a variety of courses in different disciplines. Here, we can find God’s fingerprints in all that we study. For example, because God is found in the natural world around us, we study biology, chemistry, and physics. Because God is found in our humanity, we study the works and ideas of women and men across the ages. We revel in the beauty of fine art and literature, we ask questions fundamental to the human person in philosophy and theology, and we see the best and worst of human nature in history. Always a very practical man, Ignatius would no doubt agree that we can also find God in our business courses, in the innovation that leads to progress and in whatever promotes genuine human community and economic justice.

In particular, the sense of wonder that comes with new discovery and the excitement of creative innovation provide especially potent moments during which we can come to know God more fully. In these moments, you are invited to recognize how God becomes present to you and experience how you are transformed in the process.

“The world is charged with the grandeur of God”

Gerard Manley Hopkins, S.J. (1844-1889)
The Jesuit Way:

An Invitation

So much more could be said of the Jesuit Way, but suffice it to say that it is an invitation that is extended to you each and every day of your life at Fordham.

Just know that this invitation to be transformed for the better is a standing invitation.

Our hope is that you will embrace it with energy and live it with vigor for it is an invitation you will never regret having accepted.

Falling in Love with God

Nothing is more practical than finding God, that is, falling in Love in a quite absolute, final way. What you are in love with, what seizes your imagination, will affect everything. It will decide what will get you out of bed in the morning, what you do with your evenings, how you spend your weekends, what you read, whom you know, what breaks your heart, and what amazes you with joy and gratitude.

Fall in love, stay in love, and it will decide everything.

Pedro Arrupe, S.J. (1907-1991), 28th Superior General of the Society of Jesus

“God is certainly in the past because we can see the footprints. And God is also in the future as a promise. But the ‘concrete’ God, so to speak, is today ... God is to be encountered in the world of today.”

Pope Francis, First Jesuit Pope
