

DENSUS receives three year, $6M Multiple Threats Tactical Training Program award with International Narcotics and Law Enforcement Affairs from the Department of State

Plano, TX, September 30, 2015. On September 30, 2015. The Densus Group was awarded the task of enabling the government of Tunisia to transform the Tunisian police force into a more democratic police service that respects international human rights standards in its law enforcement operations, including the ability to respond to active threats, including ongoing terrorist actions. The Densus Group will conduct this training and provide this assistance in an environment of political transition and significant challenges, including the emerging threat of violent extremism. The Densus Group has been tasked with applying its experience in this environment to train Tunisian security forces to deliver the advanced tactical skills necessary to neutralize threats related to terrorist activities and continue to facilitate the transformation to a more democratic police service.

Densus' new CEO John Poncy, a former US Army Airborne Ranger and Infantry Officer with 20 years of experience in the private sector, believes that this is undeniable evidence of the Densus commitment to operational excellence in every aspect of their service offerings. "We charge our employees with striving to provide the highest possible level of instruction to our trainees and with surpassing the managed expectations that we work hard to agree upon with our clients. We challenge our clients to expect the best from us and work hard to agree upon that path and deliver to their specific needs. The DOS Tunisia training project has for the past few years been a cornerstone of our professional referenceability, and obviously given its location represents unique challenges and a level of professionalism, safety, and security that we thrive upon. We recognize there are very few that can provide the elevated level of instruction and thought leadership that we deliver in this market segment and in this potentially hostile environment. We will continue to do so every single day."
