JAMES SAMPLE was born in Minneapolis, Minnesota. He was a scholarship student at the Mozarteum Academy at Salzburg, Austria, and at L' Ecole des Chefs, Paris, under Verbruggen, Baumgartner, Von Karajan and Walter. Later, he became a scholarship disciple of Monteux.

Mr. Sample organized the Little Symphony of Minneapolis and then developed musical units in southern California, including the Los Angeles Federal Symphony and Opera. He was assistant to Wilfred Pelletier at the Metropolitan Opera, 1942 to 1943; he was with the New York City Center, 1943-45; was associate conductor of the San Francisco Symphony when Pierre Monteux took it on its national tour in 1947 and was conductor of the San Bernardino Symphony and the Hollywood Chamber Orchestra from 1947 to 1949. For the next four years he was conductor of the Portland, Oregon Symphony and in 1953 he became music director of the Erie Philharmonic Society.

He served as guest conductor of the Standard Hour, the most important West Coast symphonic radio program, on many occasions as well as conductor of the Hollywood Bowl Auditions of the Air and the KFI (Los Angeles) Symphony. During the war he toured with the City Center Opera Company and the Metropolitan Opera Company in forty of our fifty United States.

During this same period Mr. Sample recorded some 500 works, including 100 American compositions, for the U. S. Government for international broadcast.

James Sample has guest conducted many of the important orchestras of the United States, Canada and Hawaii in recent years and, several summers ago, he conducted a series of concerts played by the National Symphony of Mexico City in that city. He has also conducted orchestras in France and Austria.

Mr. Sample has received the honorary Doctorate of Music from the New York College of Music and an honorary Doctorate of Law from Gannon College, Erie, Pennsylvania.

Mr. Sample and his wife, Ernestine, live in a home on the bank of Lake Erie. Mrs. Sample is a talented artist who has exhibited in national shows. They have a son, William, living in California and a daughter, Sigrid, working toward her masters in Sociology and at present living and doing social work in Rochester, New York.
HERBERT WINTERS HARP was appointed associate conductor of the Erie Philharmonic in 1960. He has been first trumpeter with the Erie musicians since 1952.

Mr. Harp, a native of Hagerstown, Maryland, followed his father's profession for he, also, was a trumpeter and band director. He holds a Bachelor's and Master's degree in music from Eastman School of Music and has done additional work at New York University and at Chautauqua Institution.

At the State University of New York, College of Education, Fredonia, N. Y., he is chairman of the band department and associate professor of music, and instructor in trumpet, as well as director of the Fredonia school's symphonic band since 1946. He was a former trumpeter with the Utica and Syracuse Symphony Orchestras.

Mr. Harp and his wife, Lois, a pianist and organist, have two daughters, both flutists, and a son. The elder, Marianne, has played with the Erie Philharmonic, the younger, Carolyn, and her brother, Stephen, who sings, have yet to get into the act.

ALPHONSE GAILEWICZ returns to his post as concertmaster of the Erie Philharmonic Orchestra, a post he has had since 1950, and to his position on the faculty of the music department of the State University of New York, Teacher's College at Fredonia, which he has held for over twenty years, following a Sabbatical which took him and his violinist wife, Margaret, across the country and through the Philippines.

When the Pittsburgh-born violinist was a boy in Cleveland, Ohio, an agent came to the door of the Gailewicz home seeking violin students. The young Alphonse thought it might be interesting and started work with his instrument which led to a Master's as well as a Bachelor's of Music degree from Oberlin. While at Oberlin, he traveled with the Student String Quartet. He has studied with Mischel Piaestro, concertmaster of the San Francisco Symphony, and has been Associate Professor of Violin at the State University of New York at Fredonia for over twenty years. He and his wife live in Fredonia. They have three daughters and a grandchild.

Overture To “Oberon”

Carl Maria von Weber
(1786-1826)

Due to the success of “Der Freischütz”, Charles Kemble, the manager of Covent Garden in London, asked Weber to compose another opera to be presented there. His librettist, Flanche, suggested either an opera based on Goethe’s “Faust” or Wieland’s poem “Oberon”. The latter was selected and in January 1825, the librettist sent Weber the first two acts and on the twenty-third of that month musical sketches were begun.

On February 7th of the following year, with the score still not complete, Weber set out from Dresden to London. Rehearsals started on March 9th and the Overture, the last piece to be written, was completed on April 9, 1826. The first performance was given on April 12th and it was an overwhelming success. Three weeks later Weber died as a result of the strain in preparing the work for performance.

“His music,” wrote H. E. Krehbiel of “Oberon,” establishes a relationship between the denizens of a supernatural world and the poetically transfigured men and women of romantic chivalry and makes their union appealing to our sympathy, while the pictures make it plausible to our imagination. Weber’s music charms by its simple melodiousness and fascinates by its play of instrumental color. Yet there are discernible in it germs of some of the principles which Wagner employed in his dramaturgy.”

Two Symphonic Interludes

Otto Luening
(1900- )

When Luening’s Two Symphonic Interludes were performed in 1937, the New York Herald Tribune critic wrote:

“Mr. Luening’s brief Interludes reveals him as a follower of the modern school, who, while making discreet use of the harmonic innovations of our day, is not oblivious to the fact that music, to be attractive, must have sustained melodic interest as well as dissonant harmonies. He has been successful in creating music capable of evoking emotional response on the part of the hearer.”

The Symphonic Interludes are contrasting in mood and character. The first is in moderate tempo, Un Poco Allegro, 4/4 time; the second is marked Slowly, with Languor, 3/4 time. They are brief in extent and are scored for full orchestra, with the piano added to the orchestra in No. 2.

Synthesis For Orchestra And Electronic Sound

Otto Luening

This composition, composed in 1962, is being given its premier performance at this concert. Rather than give a minute analysis of the work, it is better to let the composer speak on his philosophy concerning the function of contemporary music. Mr. Luening has said: “I believe that the music of our time will necessarily reflect in part the complexities and pattern of our age. It seems to me that a composer who is unaware of the most recent developments in his art and who does not use them when there is an artistic need for the use of material, is turning his back on his own age. This was never done in the periods of music which we venerate; I mean the Romantic movement of the last century and the Classical period before that. I do not feel that a composer need necessarily turn his back on everything that has been done before. That would be very unwise and bizarre. He needs to have the courage to explore and the desire to formulate those musical ideas which come to him because he is living today, and not living in memories and reminiscences of the glorious days of old."

Suite From The Opera “Der Rosenkavalier” Richard Strauss (1864-1949)

It seems hard to believe that a man noted for his epic symphonic poems can also be capable of such lifting music as we find in the score to “Der Rosenkavalier.” Before the first performance of the opera, Strauss let it be known that the new opera did contain some waltzes, but no one was prepared for the wealth of melody which was to come. The Berlin Boersen-Courier learned from a “well-informed source,” that the new work was “absolutely unStrauss-like, inasmuch as none of the excessively modern subtleties predominates in the vocal parts or orchestration. On the contrary, the score is brimming over with exceedingly pleasant and catchy melodies, most of them in three-four time. Yes, melodies, incredible as this may sound in the case of Richard Strauss.” Its first performance was given in Dresden on January 26, 1911, and since then has become a perennial favorite in the opera houses around the world.

Symphony In E Minor, No. 5 (From the New World) Anton Dvorak (1841-1904)

Dvorak came to America late in 1892 and remained here for almost three years as head of the National Conservatory of Music in New York. During this period he not only taught and led concerts, but also composed and absorbed the quaint American customs and folk-lore. The “New World” symphony was composed in a five-room apartment on East 17th Street in New York City.

It has been said that Mrs. Jeanette Thurber, who founded the school, had noted his sudden interest in Negro and Indian folk music and urged him to express his reactions to America in a new symphony. This interest was also prompted by three individuals. They were the critic James G. Huneker, Mrs. Thurber herself, and Erie’s own Harry T. Burleigh, who was, at that time, a student at the Conservatory. They showed him quantities of Negro melodies. Burleigh was invited to the house to sing them for him and often Dvorak would stop him in the middle of a song and ask, “Do the Negroes really sing them that way?” He was especially taken with “Swing Low, Sweet Chariot” and any tune detective can readily identify part of the spiritual in the G major theme introduced by the flute in the opening movement.

Each of the four movements of the symphony is preceded by an Introduction. In the first movement, this is an Adagio in which the horns and lower strings foreshadow the first theme of the Allegro molto. The second motif, introduced by the flute, is the one we have just mentioned in the previous paragraph.

After another slow introduction the world-famous Largo is heard, the first principal theme being introduced in the English horn accompanied by muted strings. After a repetition of much of the Introduction, the beautiful melody returns and is soon followed by a new theme in C sharp minor played by the oboe over an organ point in the cellos. According to Dvorak, this section is intended to suggest the gradual awakening of animal life on the prairie. The first theme returns in an even more beautiful setting to conclude the movement.

The Scherzo is in the usual form and contains many of the themes already heard. It has been likened to an Indian dance with chanting. Following the Introduction to the last movement, horns and trumpets blare forth the initial theme against fortissimo chords in the full orchestra. A dance-like melody in triplets is then heard. The clarinet intones the second theme over a tremolo in the strings. Themes from the other three movements reappear and a tremendous climax brings the symphony to a close; a symphony which is truly a tribute to the “New World.”
Mr. Robert Tregler, principal violinist of the Erie Philharmonic, serenades Mrs. Milton Hill, as she models a gown from London's.

WHO makes culture possible?

You do. Without you and those like you who support cultural activities of all kinds, the music of the Erie Philharmonic would play to the orchestra alone. Theatres would stay dark. Art galleries go untrodden.

But thanks to your support, Erie has more cultural activities each year...activities in which we can all take pride.
