NATURAL HISTORY

Deep below the waters surface in many places around the world lie remnants of ships that have sailed on the sea. Many hold grim stories of tragedy as they lie in their watery grave hidden from the topside world. But as humans grieve the loss the ocean environment that surrounds the vessel begins to transform it into a platform for life.

Steel and wooden frames provide an artificial reef allowing phytoplankton to settle. The interior of these structures provides protection for marine life and the corridors of a luxury ship now provide a passage for the new inhabitants to travel.

Time weaves its magic, new life continues to gather, many years later a thriving metropolis now exists in what was once a barren sandy bottom. The tragic wreck that once haunted humans has now become "The Living Graveyard".
