

MAGIC(S) is a passionate, subject-driven account of a medical magician's daily routine throughout many of Israel's pediatric wards where he treats kids of all ethnicities with large doses of humour in an effort to speed healing and medical recovery. It further tells the story of contemporary life amidst security and political tensions in a time when cultural tensions are at a heightened level throughout this land.

Science has already proven that laughter is a very effective medicine. MAGIC(S) demonstrates that no matter the cultural differences, children really do smile the same way all over the world.
