Although Vancouver's most talked-about coffee shops tend to favour a bare-bones, minimalist aesthetic—all clean lines, white surfaces, and reclaimed-wood accents—PLATFORM 7 bucks the trend with interiors inspired by a 19th-century London train station. With its suspended wrought-iron ceiling, classic railway signage, and collection of vintage luggage sets and antique birdcages strewn artfully throughout, the cozy café regularly serves as a meeting point, afternoon chill spot, and workstation for residents of the city's Hastings-Sunrise and Kitsilano 'hoods. As mesmerizing as the design, of course, are Platform 7's edible offerings: a well-rounded selection of Stumptown coffee; drool-worthy cookies, pies, and muffins; and dramatically prepared pour-overs that are touted as among the best in town.
