Highlands Ranch school recognized for innovation

By Kaitlyn Gipple

STEM School Highlands Ranch was one of 30 schools honored recently at the International World-Leading Learners Convention, co-hosted by America Achieves and the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

The school's recognition was a result of its work with industry partners and its unique Career Discovery Program, the first of its kind for Colorado high school students. The program offers a menu of options for youths to explore STEM fields in real-world settings that could lead to internships, apprenticeships and full- or part-time jobs after graduation.

Executive director of the school Dr. Penny Eucker spoke alongside Panther Industries' Christian Dow, who discussed how working with the school is not just about philanthropy.

"We see it as a unique opportunity for industry to give insight into curriculum, while at the same time benefiting from top-notch interns who could likely become some of our best employees," Dow said.

"To be one of only 30 schools across the world selected for our work aligning education with business and preparing our students for the 21st century world is quite an honor," Eucker added.

The event culminated with Jon Schnur, executive chairman of America Achieves, echoing the need for industry and education collaboration.

"We are witnessing the most significant and fast-paced economic change in recent global history," Schnur said. "Schools need to change as the world is changing."
