More than 14 years have passed since my son Jonathan was stillborn due to a cord accident. In a way it feels like forever ago that my doctor held my hand as he silently shook his head, indicating that my baby no longer had a heartbeat. Yet, the memories are so fresh that it seems like it was only yesterday. I am sure that because of M.E.N.D. I still talk about him after so many years more than I would otherwise. Sometimes I wonder if Jonathan and the little baby we miscarried several years later would be only a faint memory to my family had I not started this organization. Certainly M.E.N.D. keeps my babies’ memories very much alive.

Most of my family freely talks about Jonathan very regularly. Quite often we reflect on the ways they were each told of his death, how we’ve changed and grown spiritually as a result, and how his life—through his death—continues to bless countless people all over the world. My family is faithful attendees at our annual M.E.N.D. remembrance ceremonies, they remember him at Christmas, and some of them purchase a token for us on his birthday each year.

I am thankful beyond words that they “get it.” They have never hinted that I made too big of a deal out of losing a baby, they never tire of hearing about him, and they continue to grieve his loss. However, after years of directing an infant loss support organization, I realize I am a minority in this area. It hurts me when couples share at our support groups how their parents (the grandparents of the baby), their siblings, and various other relatives urge them to move on and try to forget “what happened.” Regularly couples come to M.E.N.D. and share that certain family members have decided it was time for them to just get over the loss. They are showered with hurtful clichés such as “You just need to have another one,” or “It is time for you to move on with your life and forget about what happened.” Honestly, I cannot even begin to relate to a family member being so harsh and insensitive about the death of a baby—someone’s beloved child. How could we ever forget? Even if we go on to have ten more babies, one child never replaces another. And furthermore, for most of us the circumstances surrounding the loss were extremely traumatic. The situation alone can never be forgotten, not to mention the fact that a baby died in the process.

I have also learned over the years that sometimes family members just need to be educated. A generation ago the loss of a baby was dealt with very differently. Moms were not allowed to hold the baby, they were not encouraged to see it, and sometimes they were not even told the sex of the baby. We’ve come such a long way over the years with educating nurses and doctors on the emotional attachment and deep love we have with our babies and the extreme importance of creating memories and validating our losses. But we still have a long way to go with educating our community—our families. I know of numerous parents in M.E.N.D., who after arguments and becoming deeply offended and hurt by family members, have had to sit them all down and attempt to explain that they lost a child. They’ve had to tell them that they couldn’t just “go have another one,” as if it were a dog they could pick out at the pet store. They’ve resorted to pouring their hearts out, admitting how hurtful it is when the baby who died isn’t included in the answer to “how many grandchildren do you have?” Or that no one recognized the fact of how painful it was at Christmas when Santa didn’t have a reason to stop by their house. Or why they couldn’t join the family or go to church on Mother’s Day. Or why attending a cousin’s baby shower just wasn’t going to happen. Or why holding their newborn niece or nephew was incredibly painful, so please don’t shove the baby in my arms!

The vast majority of the time, this course of Grieving the Loss of a Baby 101 has proven to be very beneficial. It’s really just about making others aware. But even after all that, if extended family still doesn’t‘ get it, then it’s their loss. They are the ones who lose out on being a part of a little life that was so precious and is missed so much. Additionally, they are missing a multitude of opportunities to be a blessing to you by loving you through the darkest days of your life. If that’s the case, it may sound like a spiritual platitude, but the scripture is true that says, “Jesus sticks closer than a brother.” Even if it appears that no one else seems to know how you feel, the Lord does. He is always there for you. Lean on Him to be your Comforter and pray He will soften the hearts of the ones you love. Also pray He will give you the ability to forgive those who have hurt you so you don’t have a heart of bitterness along with your grief. Finally, know that we at M.E.N.D. are here for you. We’re not biological family members—and we’re certainly not Jesus — but we are a family of those who share the common bond of losing a child. We understand, we’ve walked the road, and we definitely get it.

A Plea To Health Care Providers

When you tell me that something is wrong with my baby, please look me in the eye. Please train your staff not to whisper and look at me with pity, but instead ask them to be helpful, knowledgeable and prepared to help patients with the very real possibility that sometimes bad things happen during pregnancy and birth. Please don’t ever say “You can try again” or “There is still time.”

When I beg to go to the hospital after my baby has died during the twenty-first week of pregnancy, please don’t refer me to a new doctor’s office who begins my labor and sends me home in pain until my baby can be removed in his outpatient office the next day. Please, please send me to the hospital where I will be made comfortable, monitored and receive grief care. When I tell you that I don’t want to repeat my miscarriage experience of being alone all night in my bathroom in excruciating pain, losing my baby, please listen to me.

Please inform your financial office of my situation so I don’t get a call a few weeks later requesting pre-payment of the physician’s birthing charges.

If I have been referred to you urgently as a new patient, please take a moment to become acquainted with my struggle so when you remove my baby, even if I couldn’t have held him or looked at him because of his condition, you would know how much he meant to me.

Please don’t expect me to arrange for his remains to be transferred over to a laboratory that I would also have to contact on my own to request an autopsy.

When you are doing my follow up gynecological examination to make sure that I am healing after the procedure that occurred on the worst day of my life, please don’t ever, ever, ever say, “Case closed.”

From Crisis to Purpose: A Mother’s Memoir

By Tonya Dorsey
www.tonyadorsey.com

Tonya Dorsey and her husband Dennis had only been married a short time when they decided to start a family. They excitedly planned and prepared for their sweet little one on the way and could not wait for her arrival. However, things quickly changed when at 18 weeks into the pregnancy Tonya awakened one morning not feeling well, then realized her water broke. The Dorsey’s fought hard to keep their little girl, but an infection set in, and an emergency surgery was required.

Dorsey openly shares the deep heartache and raw emotions she endured the months and years following the loss of her little girl Alexandra. Additionally, she touches on subsequent pregnancies, telling her subsequent children about their big sister, and always keeping Alexandra’s memory alive.

Medical Moment

Parental grief responses and personal growth following the death of a child.

Objective: Conceptualizing parental grief as a psychosocial transition, this cross-sectional study of bereaved mothers (N = 35) examined the relationship of dispositional factors, grief reactions, and personal growth.

Results: More optimistic mothers reported less intense grief reactions and less distress indicative of complicated grief. Additionally, mothers who usually coped actively had less intense grief reactions. Mothers who habitually coped using positive reframing had less intense grief reactions and less complicated grief. Personal growth, a positive dimension of grief, was associated with all three coping dispositions; mothers’ active coping, support seeking, and positive reframing suggesting more personal growth occurred in mothers exhibiting more of these coping dispositions.

Conclusions: These findings increase understanding of dispositional factors associated with bereaved mothers’ grief responses and expand knowledge concerning personal growth as an outcome of bereavement.

When Family Takes the Lead

On May 25, 1999, I found myself sitting alone in my doctor’s private office. Outside the door was a hallway that led to a waiting room filled with women who would eventually give birth to healthy babies. I, on the other hand, had just gotten off the phone with my husband after telling him that our unborn son Joseph was dead. I felt myself crumbling under the weight of strong emotions that I had never had to carry before, and I couldn’t understand why I felt that way. Why was I so upset? I had never even met this baby. My heart was screaming out that this was very wrong, but my head tried hard to convince the rest of me that this really wasn’t a big tragedy.

Now I marvel that I even attempted to downplay the horror that I was facing. Maybe it was because I thought that’s the way other people would think. I believe that my Southern heritage also played a big role in my response to my baby’s death. I grew up in a culture where one would never consider doing anything that would cause inconvenience or awkwardness for others. I also grew up among strong, independent people who rarely displayed strong emotions. The combination of all these factors led me to initially believe that Joseph’s death should be dealt with quietly, calmly, and with little ado.

My parents and sister made the 12-hour drive to be with me right away when Joseph was born. I saw my father cry for the first time in my life in that hospital room when he saw his still little grandson for the first time. That was one of the first signs to me that maybe I was underestimating just how much this loss was going to affect me. If Dad was this upset, shouldn’t I be allowed to be pretty upset, too?

My mother jumped into protective mode, making sure I got sleep, food, and clothing to wear to the memorial service. She ran the kitchen and the greeting committee as guest after guest came by to visit. Meanwhile, my sister Jenny let me cry and talk, and she immediately called to order a magnolia tree to plant in Joseph’s memory back home.

Eventually I did learn to allow myself to fully hurt and grieve, and I think that my parents and sister helped me do that. The concern they showed for me in the beginning affirmed the emotions I was experiencing. However, later, we had different perspectives about how to remember Joseph and how long grieving should last. Sometimes my displays of grief seemed too extreme or a little scary to them. I hit a real low about ten months after Joseph’s death, and I could tell from the concern in their voices that they thought this wasn’t normal. However, because of the initial denial I experienced, I was better able to understand my extended family’s later responses to my grief. As a result, I could see their reactions to what I’m sure they thought were illogical displays of pain with compassion instead of anger.

My family still touches me with their remembrances of Joseph. My mom and sister still tend to Joseph’s grave and regularly place new flowers there for me. My dad tells his friends about his grandson who is his namesake. I think one of the kindest gestures I’ve seen from my family lately was a caption my mom put under a family photo on my parents’ anniversary. It was a picture of my parents with all their children and grandchildren gathered around them. Under it she wrote, “This is the results of 42 years of marriage. We have one grandson who is not in the pictures; he is in the arms of God. We actually have nine grandchildren.”

Years after Joseph died, I asked my mom to tell me what the hardest part of the whole experience was for her. She said, “I couldn’t feel what you were feeling. I couldn’t understand that kind of pain. All I knew was that you were hurting more than I could imagine, and it was almost more than I could take watching my daughter suffer so much.” My parents hurt, but in a different way and for different reasons than I did. Just like they couldn’t feel what I was feeling, I couldn’t understand how it must have felt to watch your own child suffer the way I did and not be able to do anything to make it better. This was a new experience for all of us, no matter what our perspectives, and we all had to struggle through as best we could with a lot of help from the Lord and a lot of love for each other.

♥ Sharlene Libby, mommy to Joseph Libby New Mexico

Remember, there are no words when someone has experienced the loss of a loved one and when flowers aren’t enough to express your caring ... an elegant way to comfort the heart ... personalize it for the family or person you want to bring comfort to ... a continuing expression of love and support with loving thoughts in sympathy.

In the following weeks be sure and stay in touch with the family or individual by making personal contact with them. Plan a trip or outing if the relationship is a close one. The gift of continual caring and friendship is always appropriate and well received if given from the heart. Sometimes it is the intangible gift that is most appropriate and lasting.

Support From Others

Don’t tell me that you understand.
Don’t tell me that you know.
Don’t tell me that I will survive.
How I will surely grow.
Don’t come at me with answers
That can only come from me.
Don’t tell me how my grief will pass,
That I will soon be free.
Accept me in my ups and downs.
I need someone to share.
Just hold my hand and let me cry,
And say, “My friend, I care.”

Not Like You

I am a mother, though not like you.
You cradle your sweet baby in your arms,
Mine are empty,
but I hold him in my heart.
You brush her soft curly hair,
and tie pretty pink bows just right.
A lock of his hair is tucked neatly in a book.
You pick daisies and tie them in a chain to wear around her neck.
I cut lilacs and arrange them in a vase to set at his grave.
You look forward to dreams and plans.
I hold on to memories.
I am a mother, though not like you.

Chapter Updates

NW Arkansas
M.E.N.D. — NW Arkansas hosted its fourth annual Christmas Candlelight Ceremony in early December. Author and speaker Holley Gerth, mom to Baby Gerth, shared comforting and encouraging words about a “different kind of hope”—one that is authentic, honest, and grounded in the sovereign being of God. Many thanks to Melissa Totty, Aly Kirkpatrick, Tamesha Greenlee, Kaysha Thompson, the Mulkey Family, and Pam Morren who worked behind the scenes to make the event beautiful.

Kansas
M.E.N.D. — Kansas is gearing up for our annual Bunco Bash that will take place this spring. Check the websites for updates about the date and time. If you know of parents with losses in need of help, please contact me at stephanie@mend.org.

Stephanie Metzger

Houston
M.E.N.D. — Houston had a beautiful Christmas Candlelight Ceremony on Saturday, December 5. Nearly 160 parents, family and friends came to remember their babies at the beginning of this joyful and yet sometimes painful season. We talked about how to find joy when we are grieving by trusting in Christ, serving others and taking care of ourselves.

I want to thank the many volunteers who made it possible for everything to run so smoothly: Robyn Andersen, Ana Ayon, Jeff and Karla Davis, Jason and Jennie Drude, Gerald and Jaimie Crump, Jeanelle League, Sandy Huelsebusch, Emily Lovejoy, Russ and Rosemary Massey, Christine Miles, Jenni and Tyler Trent, Brandy Wilson, Tim and Sarah Winebrenner.

Texarkana
M.E.N.D. — Texarkana held our third annual Christmas Candlelight Ceremony on December 3 at Beech Street First Baptist Church, Texarkana, Arkansas. We were blessed to be able to minister to more than 75 people. It was a beautiful ceremony in which author Jennifer Hander reminded us to look to God for peace, love, and hope. Melanie Jenkins also delivered a special message through song. I would like to extend a special thank you to all of our sponsors who supported us either through a monetary gift or by giving an item to be raffled. The ceremony would not have been possible without the help of my committee members: Tania Greer, Dawn Kennedy, Toni Sherman, and Melissa Thomas. I appreciate each of you. I would also like to extend a thank you to Amanda Graham, Scentsy consultant, for our November Scentsy fundraiser.

Monica Davis
Hill Country
— Hill Country has been busy ministering to grieving families, raising funds for our chapter, and promoting community awareness. I attended a Walk to Remember in San Antonio in October. I was able to talk with many families who lost a baby, and I also made new connections with the San Antonio hospitals. I am very thankful to Hill Country Memorial Hospital for inviting me to speak at their first Remembrance Ceremony, a “service of remembrance for the babies we have lost.” It was a beautiful event, and there were many families who attended. My main message was “You are not alone.” My monthly group has been talking about our plans for getting through the holidays. It is an especially tough season when you have lost a child. I continue to help families also through email who live in the Austin and San Antonio areas.

Larissa Hallford

Tulsa
— Tulsa is ministering to the needs of grieving families in Northeast Oklahoma through our monthly support meetings, phone counseling, and carebag ministry. We have started initial planning for our first Walk to Remember Ceremony in October 2010 to offer the community a Christ-based service to commemorate their babies.

Michele Wilson

SW Missouri
— Southwest Missouri continues to serve families in the Springfield area through our support group meetings and our Facebook group. During the holidays I found myself searching high and low for unique memorial Christmas ornaments from some of our new families. As we head into the new year, we are excited about two potential fundraisers this spring and hosting our first Christmas Candlelight Ceremony in December 2010.

Más de 14 años han pasado desde que mi hijo Jonathan murió debido a un accidente del cordón. De una manera se siente como si fuera hace mucho tiempo que mi médico detuvo mi mano mientras silenciosamente sacudió su cabeza indicando que mi bebé ya no tenía un latido. Sin embargo, los recuerdos son tan frescos que parece que fue ayer. Estoy segura de que a causa de la organización de M.E.N.D. todavía hablo muy seguido sobre Jonathan después de tantos años y más de lo ordinario. A veces me pregunto si Jonathan y el bebé que perdimos años después serían sólo una débil memoria a mi familia si no hubiera empezado esta organización. Sin duda M.E.N.D. mantiene sus recuerdos muy vivos.

La mayor parte de mi familia habla libremente y muy regularmente de Jonathan. Con bastante frecuencia reflexionamos sobre la forma que cada uno se les dijo de su muerte, cómo hemos cambiado y crecido espiritualmente y cómo su vida—a través de su muerte—continúa bendecir a personas innumerables alrededor del mundo. Mi familia son los fieles asistentes en nuestras ceremonias de recuerdo anuales de M.E.N.D., lo recuerdan en Navidad, y algunos de ellos nos compran un recuerdo en memoria de su cumpleaños cada año.

Estoy bastante agradecida que mi familia “lo entiende.” Ellos nunca han insinuado que exagere el dolor de perder a mi bebé, nunca se cansan de audiencia sobre él, y continúan a lamentar su pérdida. Sin embargo, después de años de dirigir una organización de apoyo de perdedores infantiles, sé que soy una minoria en este ámbito. Me da tristeza cuando algunas parejas comparten en nuestros grupos sobre la falta del apoyo de sus padres (los abuelos del bebé), sus hermanos y varios parientes y de cómo de vez en cuando son exigidos olvidar “lo que sucedió.” Incluso y regularmente parejas vienen a M.E.N.D. y comparten que ciertos miembros de la familia han decidido que ya era tiempo para ellos olvidar la pérdida. Les dicen comentarios dolorosos como, “sólo necesitas tener otro.” O “Es tiempo para seguir con su vida y olvidar lo que sucedió.” Sinceramente, yo no puedo comenzar a entender un miembro de la familia que sea tan insensible acerca de la muerte de un bebé—hijo amado de uno. ¿Cómo será posible olvidar? Incluso si vamos tener 10 más bebés, un niño nunca reemplaza otro. Y además, para la mayoría de nosotros las circunstancias que rodean la pérdida fueron extremadamente traumáticas. La situación nunca será olvidada, y además el hecho de que un bebé murió en el proceso.

También he aprendido durante los años que miembros de la familia solo necesitan ser educados sobre esta tema. Una generación atrás, la pérdida de un bebé se trató muy diferente. Las madres no podían celebrar su bebé, no eran alentadas a ver y mucho menos pasar tiempo con el bebé, y incluso a veces no se les dijo el sexo del bebé. Hemos caminado un largo camino durante los años con educar a enfermeras y médicos sobre el apego emocional y profundo amor que tenemos con nuestros bebés y la extrema importancia de crear recuerdos y validar la pérdida. Pero aún tenemos un largo camino que recorrer con educar nuestra comunidad, es decir, nuestras familias. Me doy cuenta de numerosos padres en M.E.N.D.—que después de argumentos y ofensas profundamente dolorosas de parte de los miembros de la familia—han tenido que sentarse con ellos y tratar de explicarles que perdieron a un niño. Han tenido que decirles que no se trata sólo de “tener otro bebé,” como si se tratara de escoger un perro de la tienda de mascota. Han admitido que doloroso es cuando el bebé que murió no está incluido en el número de la respuesta a la pregunta de “cuántos nietos tienen?” O que nadie reconoce el hecho de que dolorosa fue en Navidad cuando Santa no tenía razón de pasar por su casa. O por qué no podía unirse con la familia o ir a la iglesia en el día de las madres. O, por qué asistiendo a un baby shower de un primo no iba a suceder. O por qué cargando la sobrina o sobrino recién nacido fue increíblemente doloroso así como que por favor no empujen el bebé en mis brazos!

La gran mayoría de las veces, este curso sobre la pérdida de un bebé ha demostrado ser muy beneficioso. Realmente se trata de elevar el conocimiento de este doloroso tema. Pero después de todo, si todavía no lo entienden, realmente la pérdida es de los que no tratan de entender. Son ellos los que pierden en ser parte de una vida que es tan valioso y una vida de un bebe que es extrañado demasiado. Además, están perdiendo una multitud de oportunidades de ser una bendición a usted en manera de amarlos durante los días más oscuros de su vida. Y si es así, la escritura es verdad que “Jesús se acerca más que un hermano.” Aunque parece que nadie entiende cómo se siente uno, nuestro Señor si lo entiende. Siempre estará ahí para usted. El es su consolador y oren que él ablanda los corazones de sus seres queridos. Oren también que Él le dará la posibilidad de perdonar a aquellos que los han herido para no tener un corazón de amargura encima de su dolor. Por último, nosotros en M.E.N.D. estamos aquí para usted. Nosotros no somos amigos de la familia biológicos—y ciertamente no somos Jesús—but somos una familia de quienes comparten el vínculo común de perder a un niño. Hemos caminado el camino, y lo entiendo.

Brandon and Sara Skaggs of Cedar Hill, Texas, along with big sister Sydney, joyfully announce the arrival of Brady Gantt, born October 21, 2009, measuring 6 lb., 4 oz., and 18 ¼ inches long. The Skaggs lovingly remember Elliott, April 28, 2008, multicystic kidneys, and Baby Skaggs, miscarried December 2006.

Wally and Laura Bracken of Broken Arrow, Oklahoma, joyfully announce the arrival of Paul Alexander, born November 12, 2009, measuring 7 lb., 10 oz., and 21 inches long. The Brackens lovingly remember the Bracken twins, stillborn September 21, 2008, preterm labor.

Christmas Candlelight Ceremonies

Our 2009 annual Christmas Candlelight Ceremony was perhaps my favorite one yet. There were more than 175 guests remembering more than 70 babies. Brandee Dill opened in prayer, followed by M.E.N.D.—SW Missouri director Heather Fann and her assistant Heather Bass lighting our M.E.N.D. candles. DaLana Barsanti sang Selah’s “Wonderful, Merciful Savior.” I spoke on “Broken Praise,” which was followed by Meg Everhart singing Mandisa’s “Broken Hallelujah.” Each family then came forward to remember their baby by lighting a candle in their baby’s memory. Heavenly harp music was the background, then Kaylee King, little sister to Sarah Ann (stillborn June 22, 1995) sang “Candle on the Water.” The ceremony was concluded with Liz Walker singing “Peace of the Lord.” Mark your calendars now to join us next year on December 7, 2010.

Grieving vs. Remembering

When we determined this newsletter topic, I thought, “That’s great! I have a lot to share about how some of our family doesn’t grieve.” Now, as I sit to write this, I think I need to clarify my definitions: all of our immediate family “grieves” the loss of our first son, Caleb Scott, in December 2003, but only a very few actually allow themselves to participate in “remembering” him throughout these last six years.

My husband, Jonathan, and I have instituted a variety of ways to acknowledge Caleb and Baby August, the baby we miscarried in August 2004. We honor them through M.E.N.D. We have a special birthday cheesecake and hang stockings at Christmas. We had a family portrait drawn of us because we have no pictures of Jon, Caleb and me during his short six hours of life. And we had that picture framed for each of our parents and siblings.

What’s surprising is the different reactions to this gift: my sister asked not to have hers, although it remains safely in my house until, and if, she wants it. Jon’s brother has his, but chooses not to hang it. Our parents had drastically different responses: Jon’s parents hung it front and center in their living room. My parents didn’t hang theirs, but instead it was set on the floor of the spare room until I told my mother how it bothered me. She immediately apologized and explained that it was too painful for my dad to see each day. At that stage in my grief...I didn’t care. I hurt too much for everyone, so I insisted it be hung.

Over time, I came to realize that my demand may have been completely insensitive, but now the picture is lovingly hung in their new house in a room with all the grand-babies’ pictures. And my dad has since been able to at least talk about Caleb and occasionally acknowledge him in the “grandkid count,” for which I’m so thankful.

The most notable difference is in how our family participates in Caleb’s birthday. My family—mostly my mother and sister—call or email me telling me they’re thinking of me and to call if I need anything. They know I don’t usually answer the phone or go out on that day, so their calls or emails are ways to show they care and respect my boundaries for the day. My dad doesn’t usually do anything, which might bother me, had he not always been horrible with dates—even my own birthday—so it’s not a “snub,” but just “dad” and I love him in spite of it.

That brings me to my mother-in-law, Dorothy. In most cases, you might expect some ranting mother/daughter-in-law war to play out here in my text. Quite the contrary. My mother-in-law is absolute perfection when it comes to Caleb’s birthday. Every year, she’s sought out at least one or two small ornaments with his name or a picture frame with his name cut into the mat. Last year she gave us the most precious book: it was a Precious Moments book from a library sale all about the angel, Caleb, and his adventures in finding his place and role in heaven. She thought I would enjoy reading it to our subsequent daughter, Madison. Whatever the gift, Dorothy always gives it to us in time for his birthday. This year she even drove 30 minutes out of the way to bring it on his birthday, carefully staying only moments so as not to intrude on our mostly private day.

Initially these different responses were extremely painful to me. I thought, “My family should do this the best—not my in-laws.” It sounds crazy, I know. Over the years, I’ve come to give mutual grace and respect for all our family, and to recognize that however much or little they choose to remember my children, it’s always done in love. Everyone has their own coping levels and I know each of our family members love my children immensely...that’s all that matters.
