Have you ever heard the statistics of divorce following the loss of a child? Within hours of the delivery our stillborn son Jonathan, someone felt the need to inform my husband Byron and me that 50 to 80 percent of marriages fail following this kind of tragedy. I did not allow myself to become fearful of this warning; instead I was completely confident that we would fall into the 20 to 50 percent of marriages that survive.

Two days after our baby’s death, Byron’s uncle called us at the hospital to express his condolences and, as a pastor, offer spiritual encouragement. I answered the phone. Still on high doses of pain medication, I began to ramble on to him about how “we ARE going to make it! Our marriage will for sure be stronger, and we’ll love each other more in the end!” I look back on that day twelve years ago and laugh, not because I was wrong (actually, I was very right), but because Byron’s uncle probably had no idea what I was talking about! Certainly Byron and I had our struggles while grieving, but nothing serious. Like most bereaved couples, we encountered the normal “men and women grieve differently” dynamic, but we did indeed come through closer and more in love.

Before we were married, I attended a women’s marriage class at church. One point I remember learning is that the woman sets the mood of the house. Of course I know that now after 19 years of marriage, but as a young woman who had not yet experienced the role of a wife, that was a new concept to me. The teacher made it very clear she was not only referring to the emotional state of us wives. She truly meant that we set the mood of the house by creating the ambiance. As a woman with traditional values, she instructed that a house is only cozy and inviting if it’s clean, tidy, and orderly, and it is our job as wives to ensure this happens. I have taken that piece of information very seriously throughout our marriage and have attempted to make our home warm and welcoming for my husband when he comes in after a long day at work. However, this was very difficult to achieve while I was grieving the loss of our baby. Byron has never demanded or expected this perfect environment when he comes home; it is just a personal goal of mine. One day I had not been able to pull myself off the couch for hours. The kitchen was a wreck, our three-year-old had basically been on his own for the day, and I had not given dinner plans a thought. When Byron walked through the door, I burst into tears and apologized for the state that the house and I both were in. He lovingly reminded me that I had put these “happy homemaker” demands on myself, and although he appreciated it, it was not going to hurt any of us if he came home to a tornado once in a while.

Not all our grieving episodes turned out that sweetly. In the beginning when my moods were never good and a smile was rarely seen on my face, Byron had a habit of asking me, “What’s wrong?” That question always sent me over the edge and made my mood much worse, often leading to an argument. Finally, I made a rule. I told him never to ask me that again. He should just assume that any of my bad moods were about Jonathan. In the event I was mad or upset about something other than losing our baby, I’d let him know. That plan worked beautifully! When those bad moments arose, my husband knew instantly why I was grouchy, and his questioning no longer escalated into a fight.

I am deeply saddened when hurting moms contact our ministry or come to a support group and share their marital problems. Not by any means do I think they should feel pressured to keep these struggles private, but I ache for what they’re going through. Grieving is difficult enough without having to struggle to keep a marriage strong at the same time. I often tell couples, “You made the baby together, you lost the baby together, and now you need to grieve the baby together.” I am fully aware that is easier said than done, mainly because men and women truly do grieve differently. Therefore, it is very important to keep communication open. Wives, you should be able to express to your husband what you are feeling. If you had a bad day, tell him about it. If you had a good day, be sure to tell him about that, too. Don’t only talk about the negative. Try to find additional things to discuss other than the loss of your baby. I realize other topics are hard to come by during fresh days of grief, but make an effort not to bombard your husband with 24/7 doom and gloom. Husbands, listen, listen, and listen to your wives! Don’t convey a disinterested attitude, even if you’ve heard the same complaint a million times. Never be ashamed to tell her your thoughts and feelings. If you had to take a break at work today because you unexpectedly found yourself overcome with emotion, tell her! You’d be surprised how much it means to us women to hear our husbands admit their hurt. Don’t think you have to be Mr. Tough Guy. You cannot fix this, so don’t try. And when your wife pours out her heart to you, she’s not asking for a solution, just a listening ear and sympathy. Couples, be a team, not rivals. You’re not on opposite sides; you have to get through this to-
The Risks of VBAC
by Yvette Grau

Fourteen months after Erika died, I was awakened to a world I did not want to be in. What kind of life could I expect without my daughter in it? Although it was for Nik’s needs that I awoke daily, I realized I was not living nor interacting, but rather just physically being and going through the motions of the day. The pain of knowing that Erika’s birth and death were now part of a ‘statistic’ was too unbearable to endure up to this point. As my coping skills strengthened, so did my desire to increase the awareness of the risks that came with VBAC (Vaginal Birth After previous Cesarean) deliveries. At the time of Erika’s birth, these risks were vaguely discussed and VBACs were strongly encouraged, especially for insurance purposes. The statistics note that less than one percent of VBAC patients will have a uterine rupture, and furthermore, that of those patients who experience uterine rupture, less than one percent have infant fatality.

Erika was part of a statistic that ultimately affected and changed the way in which doctors handle VBAC deliveries today. VBAC deliveries are far fewer today and are not encouraged by doctors or insurance companies as forcefully as they were ten years ago. I even found a hospital in which VBAC deliveries are not allowed. Some doctors have denied patient requests for this procedure. It was time, for with Erika and all the other cases which resulted in infant fatalities, to alert the medical world that VBACs in fact carry a risk. They no longer are supported as fervently as they were ten years ago.

To those still desiring and seeking a VBAC, I urge you to be aware of every detail about the risks involved and to know that the noted ‘less than one percent risk factor of uterine rupture’ does not discriminate. This same minimal risk factor could potentially become 100 percent to the family who is left to deal with the consequences of this risk, as it did ours. Leave no question in your mind and heart unanswered by your doctor. In addition and equally important, ask questions about the hospital’s staff and their experience with VBAC deliveries. This would be my prayer and plea for you before you chose a VBAC delivery: that you fully understand the risks and have weighed all factors before deciding.

I have found solace in the fact that I know that Erika’s death was not in vain, but that she was to do God’s work in an area that needed attention. Ten years later, and through the works I have done in her memory, I know that our experience has provided many the confidence to go back to their doctors to ask more questions about a procedure. Whether anonymously or through articles I have written and shared with friends and family, I know Erika’s mission and message continues.

Always remembering Erika,
Yvette Grau

Letters to the Editor

Just wanted to drop a line and thank you for last month’s newsletter subject matter. I am not a pastor’s wife, but my husband and I have found ourselves alienated at church. When we were told our youngest son had passed away, my husband called and left a message with our pastor. He never returned the call. We never went back to that church.

We have since moved out of the area. The newsletter came a couple of days before our new pastor was to visit with us. I felt so strange asking if we would be accepted in his church, having so many babies in Heaven. The newsletter gave me the courage to ask the question. We joined the church the next Sunday and have been very happy.

Of course, I do not dwell on our loss with the new people we meet. Most of the time it just does not come up in conversation. However, we have been led to a place where it is okay to share the pain of having Heavenly babies.

Thanks for the blessings,
Jennifer Johnson

A Mother’s Song of Grief and Hope
By Melissa Mailly

Your sudden breath
From life to death,
A bitter grace,
A yielding peace.
Farewell brother, son,
Our small sweet one.
My baby boy,
Not born in joy,
In two days gone.

Lord, Yours are not our ways.
You give and take away.
Send Your love
Like a healing dove.
Though we bleed and cry
Yet death will die;
All will be restored
When we see our LORD.

Medical Moment

According to a study by Dr. Mark Hardt, Ph.D., and Dannette Carroll of Montana State University—Billings, erroneous statistics stating high divorce rates after the death of a child are seldom based on empirical evidence. Such reports demonstrate a need for the analysis of divorce rates among bereaved parents so that professional counselors can have a better idea of the risk of divorce when counseling bereaved patients.

Dr. Hardt and his team surveyed bereaved parents through the use of 253 questionnaires. 37 percent of the questionnaires were returned by fathers, while the rest were completed by mothers. More than half the sample reported having a college education. 51 percent of the sample surveyed reported having a household income of $50 thousand or greater at the time of their child’s death.

Only 9 percent of those surveyed went through divorce after their child’s death. Of the remaining subjects, 24 percent reported that they had considered divorce but ultimately found that they drew closer to their spouse through grief.

The majority of parents surveyed reported seeking counseling after their child’s death. Those who had not considered divorce were less likely to seek counseling.

Couples who are undergoing the pain of losing a child can often benefit from professional marital counseling to help deal with the stresses grief can put on a marriage. If you live in the Dallas/Fort Worth metroplex area and would like the name of a Christian counselor, e-mail Rebekah at rebekah@mend.org.

M.E.N.D. is always in need of books for its lending library. We are looking for scripturally sound books about grief or loss that we can loan to bereaved parents. If you would like to donate books to M.E.N.D., contact Rebekah at rebekah@mend.org or any chapter leader. Make sure to include your baby’s information with your donation so that it can be acknowledged in the newsletter’s “In Loving Memory” section.
Happy, happy birthday, Matthew!!

Matthew,
Four years have now gone by
Since you left here to live on high.
Yet ev’ry day we think of you
Sending our love strong and true.
You’re our beautiful big strapping boy
Filling our hearts with eternal joy.
Thank You, Lord, for our son Matthew,
For strength’ning us these trials through.
We miss him every day, that’s true.
But his life always points us to You,
So we wait as days and years go by
Til that reunion day at Home on high!

James, Jr.

I carried James, Jr. for four months
I carried him with pride
With honor
To be his mother—couldn’t wait
To see you.
Never felt you kick
Never heard you cry
And I wonder why, why me,
Why you.
I love you
Why did my first boy
Have to go
I know I have no right
To question God, the Lord, but it hurts so bad
But you left me full of love and tears and
God gives me strength and love.

James, Jr.
You will always be in my heart,
Our hearts.

Dearest Noah,

Happy 3rd birthday our sweet little boy. I wish you were here with us; we miss you so much. Here is a poem I found for you.

Happy Birthday Noah

Birthdays do not end with death,
But last as long as love,
A maelstrom of memories
That grace and honor move.
And so we celebrate your day
By visiting your grave,
A place that you have left long since,
But is all that we have.

Dear spirit, come and join us here,
Your loved ones by your stone!
Come sweep across the barrier
To claim us as your own!
Happy birthday, dearest one!
Oh, happy, happy day!
Not even the most bitter night
Can take this joy away!

Love Always,

Happy 5th birthday to our sweet little girl!

Dear Michelle,

What a tremendous blessing your short life continues to have on our family! We are thankful to have been your parents and to have had three precious weeks with you. Your little brother and sister are starting to talk of you. Though they don’t quite fully understand, with time we know understanding will come, and they will love you though they never met you! What a sweet little girl we know you would be. You would be starting kindergarten this year. We continue to wait eagerly for the day when our family will be reunited in Christ again!

Erika’s 10th Birthday

I reflect upon these past ten years and I realize the leaps and bounds I have made through this journey called grief; a journey that never ends. I also realize the depths and peaks of the valleys I have traveled through. I read my journal entries; I read the articles I have written. It all seems surreal. Did all this really happen? Instantly, my heartache tells me yes, this is my life; A life I would not change for the world.

For 26 precious days, I held you in my arms, now I hold you in my heart Where I embrace your memories that God has blessed me with. Memories I deeply treasure and would never want to be without. I’ll always wonder about your every milestone. You’d be turning ten years old! Double digits, that’s a huge milestone. I can’t help but wonder how we would be celebrating your 10th birthday. Would it be a surprise party like we gave your brother? Likewise, I’ll always wonder what your heartfelt joys would be. What subject would you like best? What sport would capture your energy? Would you be taking sign language like your sister? I’ll never know the answers to these questions. For now, I’ll focus on what I do know. I know you are with our Heavenly Father. I know that He saw you before you were born and that all the days of your life were written in His book before they came to pass. (Ps139:16). I know that your death was not in vain, Even today, your mission and message continues.

Hey, buddy! I can’t believe that it has been a year since we held you in our arms and said goodbye. Mommy and Daddy love you so much and think about you every day. We have so many questions that will never be answered. Would you have loved Baby Einstein as much as your big sister, or would you have had your own favorite? What would your favorite foods have been? What would your first words have been? The list goes on and on. We will always treasure the thirteen hours that we had with you, and we will always wish that we had been given so much more time together. I know you would have grown into a wonderful man, and we would have been so proud of you. I’m so sad that you will never get that chance.

Please keep watch over us, especially your big sister. We miss you and remember, you’ll be in our hearts, always.

Helping a Man Understand Miscarriage
By Clara Hinton

Even though a miscarriage is a shared experience between a man and woman, this type of early pregnancy loss is also a highly personal loss to a woman because of the direct physical and emotional impact the miscarriage has on the mother.

When a miscarriage occurs, a woman will often seem different to those around her almost immediately. The changes will become very evident to her husband. He will often say, “My wife had a miscarriage,” but then he will not know what to do or say beyond that statement.

It is important for a man to understand some of the immediate impacts a miscarriage has on a woman. Because of the rapid physical changes that had been taking place to accommodate a pregnancy, a woman’s body is now just as rapidly moving in reverse back to a non-pregnant state. Hormone levels are changing rapidly, causing very noticeable mood swings. Tears often occur at the most unexpected moments. Outbursts of anger are also quite common. It can take several weeks for hormone levels to get back to a normal pre-pregnancy state.

Aside from the most obvious, the feeling of emptiness that accompanies the non-pregnant uterus, a woman will often experience very heavy bleeding when having a miscarriage, along with passing large clots and tissue. This generally will last for a week, and these physical occurrences can be quite frightening. How much blood is too much? How large is a large clot? What is happening to my body? Often, a woman will say that aside from feeling empty, she feels like she is a failure, and has lost all control over her own body.

Depending on how many weeks along in the pregnancy she was, a woman may have some breast engorgement for several days. Her breasts will fill up just as though she had delivered a full-term baby, and her body will prepare for breast-feeding. Dealing with breast engorgement can be very painful, often requiring tight wrapping of the breasts to prevent the coming on of milk. This is also a very emotional time, reminding a woman that she will not be placing a newborn baby at her breasts, which are prepared to nourish a baby.

Many times the woman has seen the passing of the fetal sac, and this first sight of the developing child will reappear in the form of bad dreams for several weeks. Panic attacks, anxiety attacks, and depression are very common following a miscarriage. It is important for a husband to be very in tune to all of the changes—physical and emotional—that take place following a miscarriage.

Because there have been so many physical changes, a woman often wants to delay resuming sexual relations for a while following a miscarriage. Her body has gone through so many changes such as a feeling of fullness in her bladder, morning sickness, cessation of her menstrual period, enlargement and tenderness of her breasts, and extreme fatigue. It can take several weeks for the emotional and physical changes of a miscarriage to allow a woman to feel sexually desirable again. A husband’s tenderness and patience greatly aid a woman’s overall healing.

The experiences between a man and woman are very different when a miscarriage takes place. It helps so much when a man understands these differences. A husband’s presence, understanding, and loving support can make an enormous difference in the emotional and physical healing following an early pregnancy loss. As an added bonus, the marriage will be strengthened, too! ♥

M.E.N.D. Chapter Updates

NW Arkansas
As our chapter enters its third year of ministering to families in the NW Arkansas area, I’m once again humbled to be a part of such a vital organization and to see first-hand how supporting one another has a life-long impact. Our chapter began with one set of families and now, with a few exceptions, has moved to a totally different group of moms and dads.

This is actually encouraging to me as it is testimony that God uses M.E.N.D. to heal and move people through and beyond their grief. We are beginning a new endeavor this summer to re-introduce M.E.N.D. to local physicians, churches, and hospitals to hopefully help more families. In September, we’ll host a Texas Hold’em fundraiser in memory of Christopher Peplinski II (son to Chrissy and Christopher), and our second annual Candlelight Ceremony will be in December.

Kansas
Our group is experiencing the blessing of more and more babies! Our third subsequent baby since January is due early in July, and we are anxiously awaiting his arrival. We have been saddened to hear of several losses in our area in the past few months and hope we can be of some comfort to those families in the coming months. I am reminded of the verse “Mourn with those who mourn, and rejoice with those who rejoice.”

Houston
The 2nd Annual M.E.N.D. – Houston Texas Hold’em Fundraiser was a great success. A very special thanks those who worked the event, our players, our sponsors, and those who donated prizes.

We are excited to begin work on our upcoming second annual Walk to Remember on Saturday, October 6. The event will take place at Metropolitan Baptist Church. Please mark your calendars as this is such a special time to remember our babies. There will be special music, a beautiful balloon release, poetry, and each baby’s name will be read and their families will receive an ornament to commemorate the day.

Georgia
The Georgia chapter has been making new contacts each month through e-mail. I am thankful God continues to put those in our path who are in need of e-mail support. We continue to offer newsletter subscriptions, books through the mail, and continuous e-mail support for those who contact us. We are blessed to have had two subsequent births from members of our M.E.N.D. group in recent months.

Marie Stockdale

Texarkana
God continues to bless our group. We are excited about getting the word out to our community through letters and through our upcoming fundraiser. We look forward to seeing God work in the future.

Nacogdoches
Moving into our fourth month in Nacogdoches, I’m very excited to see what and who God brings to us. We are starting to prepare for our first annual Texas Hold’em fundraiser in hopes for a success.

Lori De La Torre
My husband, Aaron, and I met our senior year of high school. A year later we had our first son, Alex. After being apart for a few years, we decided it was time to grow up and be parents together. In July 1999, we got married and started adding to our family right away. Our daughter, Adyson, came a year later in September, 2000. We felt our family was not quite complete, so we decided to have one more child. We found out in February 2003 we were expecting a baby boy, Kane Christopher, due in September. My pregnancy with Kane was no different than my previous ones: morning sickness, severe fatigue and lots of discomfort.

On August 5, 2003, with only a few weeks to go, that all changed. I woke up from a deep sleep and felt that something was wrong. I could not get Kane to move. It was soon discovered that Kane did not have a heartbeat, and I was rushed to the hospital. After several hours of labor, Kane Christopher De La Torre was born at 12:48 a.m., with his umbilical cord wrapped around his neck twice. He was perfect, weighing four pounds and fourteen ounces.

Finding M.E.N.D. was such a blessing to me and helped me survive the grief of losing my son. I originally attended meetings in the Dallas area, but after moving to Nacogdoches, I knew it was time to bring M.E.N.D. to grieving families in my new home town. Through working with M.E.N.D. I hope to help others here in Nacogdoches.
