Post-traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD) and Loss

Post-traumatic Stress Disorder is a disorder that sometimes develops after a traumatic event, which for our readers is pregnancy and infant loss. It may develop slowly with anxiety and fear gradually growing, or may attack suddenly out of the blue after a trigger or what we sometimes call a "sucker punch." This issue will address more of the issue that many families face - PTSD after Loss.

We tend to think of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder, commonly referred to as PTSD, as it relates to those in the military who have been traumatized by their war experience. But, actually, any of us who have endured a traumatic event, including the death of our babies, can develop PTSD. The Mayo clinic defines PTSD as “a mental health condition that’s triggered by a terrifying event – either experiencing it or witnessing it. Symptoms may include flashbacks, nightmares, severe anxiety, as well as uncontrollable thoughts about the event.”

I have found that people who have never experienced the loss of a baby do not realize that we as bereaved parents indeed endured a traumatic and terrifying event. It is traumatizing to hear the words, “I’m sorry but your baby has died.” It is traumatizing to give birth to a silent baby. It is traumatizing to hold your lifeless baby (though we in M.E.N.D. highly recommend doing this). It is traumatizing to see your baby in a tiny casket and attend your child’s funeral.

Based on my experience of directing M.E.N.D. for more than 25 years, my “unprofessional mental health provider” opinion is some moms experience PTSD immediately following their loss, while others (like me) don’t have issues with symptoms of PTSD until much later when something else in life triggers those emotions.

Since my Jonathan’s stillbirth in 1995, I’m always only cautiously excited when someone announces a pregnancy, for I know all-too-well that it doesn’t mean she’ll get to bring her baby home. And it took me several years to joyfully attend a baby shower. But I don’t think those are PTSD reactions, just sad responses based on my history of loss. It wasn’t until my son and daughter-in-law announced their pregnancy that I experienced, what I think, was my first real PTSD episode. I was shocked at my uncontrollable and very unexpected reaction to what should have been nothing other than pure elation. Of course, I was beyond delighted to hear our first grandbaby was on the way, but I was not prepared for the immense anxiety that immediately kicked in. I had to nonchalantly go off by myself for a few minutes. I could not breathe normally, my heart was racing, and I was in sheer panic, yet excited at the same time.

At first, I could not figure out what in the world was wrong with me. After much contemplation, I realized it was fear. I was so afraid my kids were going to possibly endure what Byron and I have with the loss of our two babies, and all the trauma that goes along with loss. I couldn’t bear the thought of my son and daughter-in-law suffering such heartache and pain. After much prayer and talking to fellow seasoned loss moms, I was eventually able to manage my thoughts, feelings, and emotions. Until…delivery day! That old, ugly, uncontrollable anxiety reared its ugly head with a vengeance! There were complications during labor which caused me to literally have a panic attack in the waiting room. At that time, I didn’t care who was around or heard me. Looking back, I must admit I’m kind of embarrassed by it, but I now know why it happened and understand it was warranted.

Oftentimes we feel we have to keep our thoughts private, thus we deal with such strong emotions silently and without any support. While those around us may not understand, there are many who do. If you feel you are alone and dealing with symptoms of PTSD, please reach out to either a grief counselor or other loss moms. Join one or more of our private Facebook groups. Attend one of our in-person or online support groups. While we can’t take these emotions away from you, we can be there for you to validate your feelings. We can remind you that you are not alone and that it is very normal to experience anxiety, sleeplessness, bad dreams, a desire to withdraw, depression, and other PTSD-related symptoms. Please don’t go through this alone; we are here to walk this journey with you.

The Story Behind "Come Sit With Me a While"

My husband, Brandonn, and I will be married 17 years on July 30 this year. We waited a few years before trying to conceive. When we started trying, I had a few late periods, but thought it was from just coming off of birth control.

Fast forward to 2013, when God gave me a name for my future child, Samuel Boone. Not long after that, I was about five weeks late for my period, so I took a pregnancy test. There was a faint blue line. I waited a few more days and took another one - same faint line. Yet two days later, I started bleeding heavily. I called my OB/GYN who agreed to examine me, but then told me I was crazy - that I couldn’t have been pregnant. I know I was because I know my body.

We are now nine years past that and still praying for a rainbow (even though at 43, I know it would be a miracle). Mother’s Day is always hard for me with Parent/Child Dedications and when our pastor asks all mothers to stand. The assumption (at least in my church it seems) is that the term “mother” applies to those who have a child(ren) alive on earth, but doesn’t include those of us who only have children in Heaven.

I never know if I should stand or not (since I have no children this side of Heaven). I know I don’t feel comfortable standing, so I remain sitting. Because of that, I wrote this poem.

Come Sit With Me a While

Written by Kathryn Sirven
(C) 2022

Come sit with Me a while
Experience my joy divine
Come sit with me a while
Come be a friend of mine

Come sit with me a while
Experience my loneliness
Come sit with me a while
In the middle of my mess

Come sit with me a while
While my spirit soars
Come sit with me a while
While I fight battles within the war

Come sit with me a while
When life seems dark and gloom
Come sit with me a while
In my life there’s always room

Come sit with me a while
And dare to call me friend
Come sit with me a while
Until this lonely feeling ends

Come sit with Me a while
His voice whispers in my ear
Come sit with Me a while
Until your heartaches disappear

Come sit with Me a while
And let Me hold you near
Rest in calm assurance
I will conquer all your fears

Come sit with Me a while
And rest in My love alone
And in My time, dear child of Mine,
I’ll joyfully call you Home
When it comes to pregnancies and all of the complexities that come along with those experiences, both hospitals and researchers tend to focus primarily on the parent that is giving birth. A study in the October issue of Ultrasound in Obstetrics and Gynecology, however, found that losing a pregnancy at an early stage can lead to post-traumatic stress in both partners.

While the birth-giving partner is more likely to suffer from PTSD following pregnancy loss, the new study showed that non-birthing partners may also experience symptoms, though to a lesser degree.

What Did the Study Show?
This study surveyed 192 couples in the United Kingdom, and within this sample size, all couples were comprised of one man and one woman. Participants were approached in the hospital units designated for early pregnancies; consenting participants completed online surveys one, three, and nine months after early pregnancy loss.

An important step of this process was to determine which participants met the criteria for anxiety, depression, or post-traumatic stress (PTS) following their miscarriages, and the researchers utilized the Hospital Anxiety and Depression Scale (HADS) and Post-Traumatic Diagnostic Scale (PDS) within the surveys to determine.

There are similarities and differences when it comes to how parents respond to a loss. Both share negative feelings, but due to societal pressures on men and the emphasis placed on the birth parent, the emotional response is often disparate.

"There are multiple noticeable differences in the response of birthing and non-birthing partners to this event," says Zaher Merhi, MD, OB-GYN, a reproductive endocrinology and infertility specialist and founder of Rejuvenating Fertility Center in Connecticut.

"For starters, non-birthing partners tend to feel the need to be supportive and to give emotionally and physically to the birthing partner, whereas the birthing partners will most likely become more introverted and reclusive. Typically, the non-birthing partner will be inclined to try to 'fix things' emotionally and physically for the birthing partner," he says.

What Is Post-Traumatic Stress?
Post-traumatic stress disorder can occur in individuals that have experienced an unsettling event. Events that cause PTSD symptoms can be isolated or recurring. Symptoms of PTSD are broken down into four categories, including:

- Avoidance
- Hyperarousal
- Negative Thoughts or Beliefs
- Re-experiencing

The new study found that the most common PTSD symptom occurring in both partners after pregnancy loss was re-experiencing, followed by avoidance and hyperarousal.

Kenda Sutton-El, a birth worker and executive director of Birth in Color in Richmond, VA, has witnessed this during her experience working with couples going through this difficult time. "Non-birthing partners attempt to be strong for the mom because they feel as that is their role, but they will grieve in silence," she says. "They both become extremely terrified of even trying for another baby."

Given that all of the non-birthing partners in this study were men, researchers say that the part of issue surrounding PTSD symptoms and the subsequent silence surrounding the condition is that men are less likely to ask for help. "Men are generally less likely to seek support for mental health and may have poorer peer support," the researchers note.

This can compound and result in poorer health outcomes. "Both partners are likely to experience grief in its different stages, maybe in different sequences and maybe each at his/her own pace," says Merhi. "Most importantly, each individual should allow the other partner freedom to experience their grief in their own way."

How Can This Study Be Helpful?
Miscarriages are very common within the first trimester of pregnancy, with 10 to 20 percent of known pregnancies ending in a loss. This includes ectopic pregnancies, which occurs in 1-2% of all pregnancies as an embryo implants outside of the uterus and is unable to develop, resulting in pregnancy loss.

While it is common for the non-birthing partner to forego their emotions in an effort to care for the... birthing parent, a shared loss means the grief can be shared as well. Keeping lines of communication open as well as seeking out resources can aid in an emotionally difficult situation such as a pregnancy loss.

“I recommend seeking counseling help from a professional as soon as possible to help navigate the waves of emotion and pain,” says Talitha Phillips, a certified labor and postpartum doula and CEO of Claris Health in Los Angeles. “It’s important to communicate how the partner as well as other friends and family can help.”

Phillips adds, “This includes the need for physical help and a safe place to talk and process the loss. Loss can drive couples apart, but it can also bring them closer together. There is a closeness and tenderness that can form as people journey through this together.”

Potential Next Steps for Couples

Merhi advises:
- Be sensitive to each other. Talking about other pregnancies may be the non-birthing partner’s way of trying to fix things; however, what the birthing partner usually needs is someone to listen and be there.
- Support your partner. Taking the time to sit with each other, talk, and engage in activities together will help both partners heal faster.
- Ask for support. Support groups, counselors, and even therapists can be of great help to both partners.
- Get busy. Keeping yourself busy through this process is important, to decrease the constant thoughts that you have about the miscarriage. One or two new projects are adequate to keep busy while handling this change.
- Give it time. Give yourself and your partner enough time to fully experience this and come out the other side.

What This Means For You

Miscarriage is a heartbreaking thing to experience, and a difficult issue to discuss. Because of the severe strain on the birthing parent’s body and mind, we oftentimes overlook the non-birth giving partner in the situation. Losing a baby is incredibly difficult, regardless of your role in the situation.

Preparation for all outcomes is necessary for both parents, and can encourage everyone to feel comfortable in sharing their needs post-miscarriage and seek the help they deserve.

Holding On To Love After You Lost A Baby
Written by Gary Chapman PhD and Candy McVicar

As a mom who is over a decade in to living after the loss of our babies, I wish a book like this had been available when I was struggling to just get up each morning. Candy McVicar shares her own story of loss and helps connect the reader to someone who “knows” how it feels, as well as practical self-reflection exercises throughout. No topic is off limits. The chapters on how men and women grieve differently and how families and friends can help or hurt struck a chord with me. Not only does this book help you feel like you aren’t alone in your grief; it provides practical tools to help you process your grief.

Celebrating our Rainbow Babies

C.J. and Emily Woolf of Springfield, Missouri, along with big brother, Nolan John, joyfully announce the arrival of Clark Everett Woolf, born January 10, 2022, measuring 7 lbs., 14 oz.,
The family lovingly remembers Freya Woolf, stillborn October 17, 2018,
Tendemos a pensar en el trastorno de estrés postraumático, comúnmente conocido como TEPT (PTSD), en relación con aquellos en el ejército que han sido traumatizados por su experiencia de guerra. Pero, en realidad, cualquiera de nosotros que haya pasado por un evento traumático, incluida la muerte de nuestros bebés, puede desarrollar TEPT. La clínica Mayo define el TEPT como “una condición de salud mental que se desencadena por un evento aterrador, ya sea experimentarlo o presenciarlo. Los síntomas pueden incluir flashbacks, pesadillas, ansiedad severa, así como pensamientos incontrolables sobre el evento”.

Descubrí que las personas que nunca han experimentado la pérdida de un bebé no se dan cuenta de que nosotros, como padres lamentos, realmente sufrimos un trauma y eventos aterradoros. Es traumatizante escuchar las palabras “Lo siento, pero tu bebé ha muerto”. Es traumatizante dar a luz a un bebé silencioso. Es traumatizante sostener a tu bebé sin vida (aunque recomendamos enfáticamente hacerlo). Es traumatizante ver a su bebé en un pequeño ataúd y asistir al funeral de su hijo.

Basado en mi experiencia dirigiendo M.E.N.D. durante más de 25 años, mi opinión de “proveedor de salud mental no profesional” es que algunas mamás experimentan TEPT inmediatamente después de su pérdida, mientras que otras (como yo) no tienen problemas con los síntomas de TEPT hasta mucho más tarde cuando otra cosa en la vida desencadenan esas emociones.

Desde la muerte fetal de mi Jonathan en 1995, me emociono cautelosamente cuando alguien anuncia un embarazo, porque sé muy bien que eso no significa que ella podrá traer a su bebé a casa. Y me tomó varios años asistir con alegría a un baby shower. Pero no creo que esas sean reacciones de TEPT, solo respuestas tristes basadas en mi historial de pérdida. No fue hasta que mi hijo y mi nuera anunciaron su embarazo que experimenté, lo que creo, fue mi primer episodio real de TEPT. Me sorprendió mi reacción incontrolable e inesperada a lo que no debería haber sido más que pura euforia. Por supuesto, estaba más que encantada de saber que nuestro primer nieto estaba en camino, pero no estaba preparada para la inmensa ansiedad que me invadió de inmediato. Tuve que irme sola con indiferencia durante unos minutos. No podía respirar normalmente, mi corazón estaba acelerado y estaba en pánico, pero emocionada al mismo tiempo.

Al principio, no podía entender qué demonios me pasaba. Después de mucha contemplación, me di cuenta de que era miedo. Tenía tanto miedo de que mis hijos pudieran soportar lo que Byron y yo pasamos con la pérdida de nuestros dos bebés y todo el trauma que conlleva la pérdida. No podía soportar la idea de que mi hijo y mi nuera sufrieran tanta angustia y dolor. Después de mucha oración y conversaciones con otras madres compañeras con pérdidas, finalmente pude manejar mis pensamientos, sentimientos y emociones. Hasta… ¡el día del parto! ¡Esa vieja, fea e incontrolable ansiedad asomó su fea cabeza con una venganza! Hubo complicaciones durante el parto que literalmente me provocaron un ataque de pánico en la sala de espera. En ese momento, no me importaba quién estaba alrededor ni quién me escuchaba. Mirando hacia atrás, debo admitir que estoy un poco avergonzada, pero ahora sé por qué sucedió y entiendo que estaba justificado.

A menudo sentimos que tenemos que mantener nuestros pensamientos en privado, por lo que lidiamos con emociones tan fuertes en silencio y sin ningún tipo de apoyo. Aunque algunos que nos rodean no pueden entender, hay muchos que sí nos entienden. Si se siente que está sola y lidiando con los síntomas del TEPT, comuníquese con un consejero o otras madres que han tenido pérdidas. Únase a uno o más de nuestros grupos privados de Facebook. Asista a uno de nuestros grupos de apoyo en persona o en línea. Mientras no podemos evitar estas emociones, podemos estar aqui para apoyar y para que valides sus sentimientos. Podemos recordarle que no está sola y que es muy normal experimentar ansiedad, insomnio, pesadillas, deseo de retraerse, depresión y otros síntomas relacionados con el TEPT. Por favor, no pase por esto sola; estamos aquí para caminar este viaje con usted.

M.E.N.D. - Tulsa is thankful to those families who supported us by participating in the M.E.N.D.ing Miles Virtual 5K. We continue to meet the 3rd Tuesday of each month at 7:00 PM at The Office. Please follow us on Facebook to see updates and information for our fall events.

Southwest Missouri

When we first sought comfort and support after the loss of Grace Kathryn Dell in the fall of 2010, we found M.E.N.D. - SW Missouri, where we could speak her name, share her story, remember her, and find comfort with families with similar stories, strangers who became friends. We were together during subsequent pregnancies, and even a subsequent loss of our Rose Dell. My passion for my daughters in heaven, for M.E.N.D., and for our families led me to serve as the Chapter Director for the past 2.5 years, yet my time serving our families is coming to a close as our family's journey draws us away from the Springfield area.

Everything I have done, has been in memory of my own two baby girls in heaven. I would never have needed M.E.N.D. if it hadn’t been for Grace Kathryn Dell and Rose Dell. It has always been such a gift to be able to talk about our baby girls in heaven. We leave knowing our girls will be remembered by others, that their very short lives made a difference on us and the world around us.

I am thankful for all the assistants who have served our families beside me over the years. Some have been with me for a season, while others have served since before I began and continue to serve. I am blessed they were part of the ministry during the time I was able to serve as the Chapter Director, and so thankful they were there to help. I could not have done it without them.

While my time with M.E.N.D. is ending, I am thankful to announce that Kristina Witt has been approved as the next Chapter Director of M.E.N.D. - SW Missouri. She is thoughtful, kind, and has a servant’s heart. She has walked a long, hard road of grief having given back to Jesus four babies, she has done so with grace and God’s help. I know God will continue to guide and direct her as she meets the needs of our pregnancy and infant loss families. I am leaving the SW MO chapter in good hands.

Chicagoland

Thanks all of our generous supporters who participated in our M.E.N.D.ing Miles Virtual 5K. Your generosity helps us continue to serve hurting families in the Chicagoland area through our monthly support groups, care bags, and other various ministry opportunities. We are grateful to have the opportunity to continue reaching out to those in our community when they have lost a baby and to give them support, encouragement, and hope that they will not have to grieve alone.

San Antonio, Texas

M.E.N.D. has been an important part of my grief journey since the death of my sweet baby girl, Dylan. I am beyond grateful for the healing and support I have received as a member, then as a Chapter Director of M.E.N.D. – San Antonio. The Lord has now called me in a different direction. I am saddened to leave M.E.N.D. leadership, but excited to begin working as a birth and bereavement doula. Therefore, M.E.N.D. – San Antonio will close. If you are interested in and feel called to re-open our chapter, email Rebekah Mitchell at Rebekah@mend.org.

Even though our doors are closed for in-person support in the San Antonio area, you can still benefit from the ministry of M.E.N.D. through virtual support groups, the Facebook groups, and this bi-monthly magazine.

I am blessed I found M.E.N.D. during the darkest season of my life, and will forever be grateful for the comfort this ministry provided me, and continues to offer to others.

East Valley, Arizona

Thanks to everyone sharing how you participated in the M.E.N.D.ing Miles Virtual 5K with us! Someburro’s fundraiser was also great success. Keep an eye on the M.E.N.D. – East Valley Arizona Facebook group for another fundraiser soon!

The Garden of Hope is a place of peace and solace where families can come for a quiet time of reflection, prayer, or even to celebrate the life of their loved one.

The Garden of Hope was established by M.E.N.D. in 2016, and is located on property of Calvary Church in Irving, Texas.

You can remember your loved one by purchasing a brick in the Garden of Hope. Brick purchases can be made at https://www.mend.org/garden-of-hope.
Bricks purchased by August 1, 2022, will be installed prior to the Walk to Remember in October 2022.
