Country Profile

Canada is the world’s second largest country, covering a land mass of 9,970,610 square kilometres. Canada occupies the northern half of North America, encompassing six time zones from east to west. Canada’s geography changes dramatically as you move across the country, and each region boasts a significantly different landscape and climate.

Most of Canada’s 31 million people live within a few hundred kilometres of its 8,892 kilometre southern border with the United States. Canada has over two million lakes and is estimated as having one-seventh of the world's fresh water (www.oCanada.ca, n.d.). For a more thorough description of the regional geography of Canada, please visit www.oCanada.ca/geography/regional.php.

Canadian Symbols

The Arms of Canada

The present design was approved in 1994 and shows a ribbon behind the shield with the motto of the Order of Canada. This version replaces a former design drawn by Mr. Alan Beddoe.

The National Flag – The Canadian Flag is symbol of Canadian identity. The official ceremony inaugurating the new Canadian flag was held on Parliament Hill in Ottawa on February 15, 1965.

The Royal Union Flag

The Royal Union flag, commonly known as the "Union Jack", has a long history of usage in Canada. Although the Red Ensign was widely used in Canada from the time of Confederation until the national flag was adopted in 1965, the Union Jack was the affirmed national symbol from 1904 to 1965.

Canada's Political Structure

Canada is a constitutional democracy. The head of state is technically the Queen of England, who is represented by the Governor-General of Canada. However, due to the Canada Act of 1982, the Prime Minister of Canada is the actual head of the state although fealty to the Queen is kept as a symbolic gesture.

Federal

The federal Parliament is divided into two sections: the House of Commons and the Senate.

The House of Commons consists of 301 members of Parliament drawn from throughout Canada. The political party that has the majority of seats within Parliament makes up the ruling government. The party with the second most seats serves as the Official Opposition and acts as the major critic of government policy and legislative debate.

The Senate makes up the second branch of the legislative process. The Senate is comprised of 104 members, appointed by the Governor-General although the Prime Minister usually chooses the appointments. All potential laws must pass through the Senate although their actual policy-making ability is minimal.

The leader of the majority party is the Prime Minister of Canada. The Prime Minister appoints a Cabinet from members of Parliament to address individual issue-based ministries (e.g., Defence, Finance, etc.).

More information about the Federal Government of Canada can be found at www.canada.gc.ca.

Provincial

The provincial legislative body is called the Legislative Assembly. Assembly size varies from province to province, usually corresponding to differences in population. The structure and activities of provincial governments are virtually identical to the national structure.

The leader of the majority party is the Premier. The Premier appoints a Cabinet from members of the Assembly to address individual issue-based ministries (e.g. Defence, Finance, etc.).

More information about Canadian provincial governments can be found at the following Web sites:

- Government of Quebec: www.gouv.qc.ca
Political Parties

There are a number of political parties in Canada that affect Canada’s political landscape. Some party candidates run both federally and provincially whereas others only run in one arena.

Major Political Parties

- Progressive Conservative - Federal and Provincial
- Liberal - Federal and Provincial
- New Democratic Party - Federal and Provincial
- Canadian Alliance - Federal
- Bloc Quebecois - Federal
- Parti Quebecois - Provincial

The Canadian Economy

Similar to the Canadian climate and landscape, Canada’s economy varies nation-wide. More information specific to regions in Canada as well as general information about the Canadian economy can be found at http://canadianeconomy.gc.ca/english/economy/.

Business in Canada

Canada ranks among the eight most important industrialized nations in the world, and as such, is part of G8. In addition to being America’s largest trading partner, Canada boasts one of the world’s largest major stock exchanges and a very stable and sophisticated financial services industry. The strong market-oriented economic system supports high living standards and a very well-educated workforce (www.ocanada.ca).

Natural Resources

Canada’s primary natural resources are natural gas, oil, gold, coal, copper, iron ore, nickel, potash, uranium, zinc, wood and water. Leading exports are automobiles and their parts, machinery, technology products, oil, natural gas, metal, forest and farm products (www.ocanada.ca).
Business History

Before World War II, Canada was largely rural and dependent on agriculture and natural resources. There is often a misconception that Canada is still overly dependent on this component of the economy. While the Canadian agricultural and natural resource industries are not insignificant, they are dwarfed by the manufacturing, technology and service industries. (www.ocanada.ca).

Regional Business Strengths

Different regions in Canada possess different strengths according to their available natural and human resources. Visit www.ocanada.ca/explore for more detailed information about Industry in each province.

Canadian Culture

From the perspective of communication theorists Edward Hall, Canada is classified as a low-context culture. Hofstede would classify Canada as an individualistic culture with low power distance relationships; meaning Canadians are comfortable approaching superiors within organizational contexts (1997). Canadians adapt well to inequalities of power distribution in both their personal and professional lives. Additionally, Canadians usually do not feel threatened by ambiguous situations, giving them a low level of uncertainty avoidance (1997).
Public Relations in Canada

Public relations in Canada is practiced according to the principles of strategic management, public responsibility and the two-way symmetrical communication. Communication helps build relationships among organizations and publics, developing policies that are aligned with the public's interest (Lauer, 1995). Canadian corporate leaders are searching for communications practitioners who can think strategically, are well versed in media, have a thorough understanding of communication and business theory and can be effective members of the senior management team.

The Canadian Public Relations Society (CPRS) was founded in 1948 “from two original groups – the first in Montreal and the second in Toronto” (www.cprs.ca). “In 1953, these became associated as the Canadian Public Relations Society and, in 1957, the organization was incorporated as a national society (www.cprs.ca). CPRS now has 17 member societies located throughout Canada, all of which adhere to the constitution of the national society (www.cprs.ca).

Today, CPRS has approximately 2,000 members. However, this is merely a reflection of those practitioners who have chosen to become members; it has been estimated that 10 per cent of practitioners become members, and therefore there may be practitioners practicing who are not members of CPRS. Using this estimation, it is fair to say that there are approximately 19,000 public relations practitioners in Canada.

Canadian Public Relations Associations

Canadian Public Relations Society

www.cprs.ca

The Canadian Public Relations Society (CPRS) is a professional association for Canadian public relations practitioners. CPRS is dedicated solely to the public relations profession and is dedicated to serving Canadians through the establishment and maintenance of high professional, educational and ethical standards in public relations (www.cprs.ca).

CPRS is dedicated to the enhancement of public relations in Canada, and as such, offers workshops, seminars, and special events catered to the needs of public relations professionals in Canada.

CPRS has a Code of Professional Standards members must abide by. These standards are available at http://www.cprs.ca/AboutCPRS/e_code.htm.

International Association of Business Communicators

www.iabc.com

The International Association of Business Communicators (IABC) is an international knowledge network for professionals engaged in strategic business communication management (www.iabc.com).

While IABC is an international association, many Canadian public relations practitioners are members. IABC’s vision is to become a “global network that inspires, establishes and supports the highest professional standards of quality and innovation in organizational communication” (www.iabc.com). They currently provide life-long learning experiences for communicators, including conferences, seminars, workshops and special events.

IABC has a Code of Ethics for Professional Communicators. These Codes are available at http://www.iabc.com/members/joining/code.htm.
