

FRIDAY 25 November 2016

What is Critical Heritage Studies?

A one-day conference to mark the launch of the joint UCL-University of Gothenburg Centre for Critical Heritage Studies 25th November 2016, 930am-500pm

Common Ground, Institute of Advanced Studies, Wilkins Building, University College London

Conference Programme

0930-0945 Opening remarks: Professors Kristian Kristiansen (University of Gothenburg) and Michael Rowlands (UCL)

0945-1100 Panel 1 Making Global Heritage Futures (chaired by Rodney Harrison)

1100-1115 Tea/Coffee

1115-1230 Panel 2 Heritage and Wellbeing (chaired by Beverley Butler)

1230-1315 Lunch

1315-1430 Panel 3 An Introduction to Critical Archival Studies (chaired by Andrew Flinn)

1430-1545 Panel 4 Co-Curating the City (chaired by Clare Melhuish and Dean Sully)

1545-1600 Tea/Coffee

1600-1700 Panel 5 Heritage and Science (chaired by Michael Rowlands)

to be followed by

1715-1815 Launch Event: Joint UCL-University of Gothenburg Centre for Critical Heritage Studies
Drinks reception, Petrie Museum of Egyptian Archaeology, Malet Place, UCL

All welcome. Registration is free, but spaces are limited. Further details available at the Eventbrite link below.

Please register for the conference at <https://www.eventbrite.com/e/what-is-critical-heritage-studies-conference-tickets-29200178520>

Please register separately for the evening drinks reception at <https://www.eventbrite.com/e/launch-of-ucl-centre-for-critical-heritage-studies-tickets-29206499426>

The joint UCL-University of Gothenburg Centre for Critical Heritage Studies is a collaborative, international, interdisciplinary research centre. At the University of Gothenburg, it operates as a collaboration between four faculties. At UCL, the Institute of Archaeology act as the lead department in the partnership, which involves researchers from across the University.

