The Organization

At the Bay Area’s doorstep are some of the most beautiful and diverse national park sites anywhere. For 40 years, the Golden Gate National Parks Conservancy has led the transformation and restoration of Northern California’s largest national park, the Golden Gate National Recreation Area. Encompassing over 80,000 acres north and south of the Golden Gate Bridge, these sites represent coastal wildlands and urban historic sites and are home to more than 3,900 plant and animal species. As the nonprofit partner to the National Park Service and Presidio Trust, it has supported building of nine new national park sites and visitor centers, rehabilitated historic buildings, restored critical habitat areas, created magnificent park trails and overlooks and enhanced visitor experience through partnerships with artists, educators and other community service organizations throughout the Bay Area. The Parks Conservancy is an international leader in nonprofit conservation, preservation and programming. To date, it has provided more than $625 million in support of park projects and programs.

The park lands include iconic places like Alcatraz Island, Muir Woods National Monument, Fort Point National Historic Site, Ocean Beach, the Presidio, and Crissy Field, each representing America's idea that national parks are for everyone. They are among the most popular national parks in America, with more than 16 million visitors annually. At the heart of the Parks Conservancy’s work going forward, is elevating the effort to connect people to these incredible resources by enhancing the public’s awareness and providing opportunities for enjoyment and stewardship of these incredible places. At full staff capacity (300-350 employees), roughly half of the organization’s staff are dedicated to visitor services programs at Alcatraz, Muir Woods National Monument and our seven visitor centers and interpretive retail sites.

Now, after decades of park building the Parks Conservancy is shifting its focus to connecting more people to our Bay Area national parks. It’s leveraging longstanding partnerships with donors, volunteers, schools, public libraries, arts organization and others to activate these parklands in more meaningful and relevant ways. The future is focused on centering and engaging community voices in the co-design of park programs and initiatives that spark engagement around important contemporary issues such as climate change, racial and social justice and barriers to equitable park visitation.

The Parks Conservancy’s award-winning public programs already serve tens of thousands of Bay Area residents each year. With a strong emphasis on inviting people from historically underrepresented communities, supporting youth leadership, and family and community participation in its activities and creating deeper collaborations with Bay Area nonprofits, the Parks Conservancy seeks to realize the potential of the parks as a shared public resource for exploration, celebration, discovery, dialogue and play for every community. The Parks Conservancy has had 40 years of extraordinary success, and is now looking to establish stronger connections between people, nature, and the parks, fulfilling its vision of "Parks for All Forever."
