COURSE DESCRIPTION

The course consists of four half-day lectures on “nuts and bolts” practical clinical oral pathology focusing on oral cancer and other mucosal disorders commonly seen in the practice of dentistry. This is a very enjoyable course that covers clinical oral pathology in a way you’ve probably never experienced before! The lectures are presented by two highly experienced clinicians and educators in a casual, relaxed and enjoyable atmosphere with ample opportunity for audience participation. There will be special clinicopathologic conferences (CPCs) using high-quality clinical photos of actual cases, enabling participants to practice what they have learned. This course is appropriate for general dentists, specialists, hygienists and physicians.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

Health professionals completing this course will feel comfortable in addressing their patients’ concerns about oral cancer. They will know how to recognize specific oral lesions, formulate a differential diagnosis, know what to do to obtain a definitive diagnosis and know how to treat and manage these lesions. In addition, they will know the utilitarian value of newer diagnostic aids, how to do a thorough oral exam and understand the dental risks for patients taking oral bone antiresorptive agents.
