

Thank you

You're helping families like Sobita's to build better and more resilient livelihoods, so they can increasingly provide for their children.

You're empowering families with knowledge, skills and opportunities to help break the intergenerational poverty cycle. With secure livelihoods, families can improve their children's wellbeing.

Our livelihoods work

By donating to our livelihoods programming, you're helping to equip farmers to make their land more productive. This means they can grow more nutritious food for their families and to sell for income.

You're also helping families to manage money and start saving. Through microfinance, they can get loans to increase their production or start small businesses. Access to credit, savings and insurance helps them cope better with unexpected events like natural disasters or family emergencies.

With better incomes, food security and resilience, families are in a stronger position to help their children reach their potential.

The impact you're part of

Savings groups

28,459 people formed 1,354 savings groups in Tanzania

Economic empowerment

3,130 people in Papua New Guinea, mostly women, took part in financial inclusion workshops

Microfinance

2,317 loans totalling $427,680 were provided to people in Myanmar

Farmers learn climate-smart techniques

Sobita lives in Bangladesh's southwest coastal region, which is prone to cyclones, tidal surges, floods and drought. Not long ago, her land was barren, and her family struggled to get by.

This all changed through a World Vision food security program. Sobita learned techniques like growing vegetables in bags to keep them out of the saline soil.

Now, her thriving farm produces enough for her family's food and income needs. She also shares her knowledge with other female farmers.

“ I like our vegetables,” says Sobita's daughter Pryanka, aged nine. She loves helping in the garden, and only wants to eat vegetables grown at home.

Thank you for your continued support

You're making an incredible difference. With your help, families are becoming more resilient and working their way out of poverty. We hope you'll keep helping communities to gain control of their futures.

Help change more lives

Building better livelihoods is just one part of community development. You can also donate to our other program areas, including education, emergencies, health, water and supporting Indigenous Australians.

Donate now:

$340 can go towards providing farmers with vegetable production equipment, like planting trays, shade netting to ensure animals don't destroy crops.

$560 can help train farmers on improved seed and fruit tree varieties to get better harvests – allowing them to also sell their surplus produce at market bringing in extra income.

$680 can help train farmers group to improve crop production methods including seeding, weeding, land preparation, post-harvest and storage.

$ is my donation amount (min. $10)
