Chattanooga's "Passageways" project started a trend across the country that has encouraged urban cores to rethink their alleys as protected spaces for public art and community gathering. Downtown Stevens Point has some great alleys that are perfect for this kind of transformation.

High on our list is the alley between the Stevens Point Journal building and Mid-State. This wide passageway is spacious enough to become a community plaza that would add outdoor learning, working, and community space for Mid-state students and downtowners alike.
