

HOLIDAY ORNAMENTS

These international jewelry brands offer seasonal cheer in the form of new bijoux.

IN KEY
Kit and Ace's
18K rose
gold Trinity Ring ($158)

Northern Lights

This month, Canadian athleisure brand Kit and Ace, which was launched in 2014 by JJ Wilson and Shannon Wilson—the son and wife, respectively, of Lululemon founder Chip Wilson—debut its first-ever jewelry collection. Echoing the brand's signature keyhole motif, the line is available in both solid and electro-plated 18K rose gold, as well as striking nickel-free silver designs ($78 to $500). And while the collection specializes in simple femininity, the lighthearted “beardy man” cuff links, inspired by the light fixtures at Kit and Ace's boutique in Vancouver's historic district, offer an ideal accessory option for men. 225 Elizabeth St., kitandace.com —Coleman Bentley

MUSEUM-WORTHY

In 2014, Moscow's Kremlin Museum mounted an exhibition that highlighted sumptuous jewelry throughout India's history. The show was dedicated to the late Munnu Kasliwal of Jaipur's Gem Palace, a legendary emporium of handcrafted bijoux with an international following of connoisseurs. That show inspired the newest jewels from Munnu's son Siddharth Kasliwal, a ninth-generation scion—the family's ancestors served as jewelers for Mughal royalty—who heads the Manhattan atelier Munnu opened in 2007. Siddharth, who works on unique pieces instead of new collections, rendered the exotic splendor of the gems from the exhibit into one-of-a-kind earrings and a necklace. The pair drip with crimson spinel, uncut diamonds and voluptuous pearl drops set against traditional jali work, lending the set a festive air fit for a holiday party—in a palace. 49 E. 74th St., munnuthegempalace.com
—Sahar Khan

IN LOVING MEMORY Siddharth Kasliwal designed this necklace (price upon request) as a tribute to his father.

ICONS COLLECTION From top: Iris Apfel wears eyeglasses ($375) designed by Efva Attling (right); Attling's Beatles'-inspired “It's Only Love” necklace ($1,555).

BEATLEMANIA

Like any teenage girl growing up in the '60s, Efva Attling worshipped The Beatles. Unlike most teenagers, by age 17 Attling was also a young jewelry-maker apprenticing with one of Sweden's finest silversmiths. Now, the Stockholm- and NYC-based former model and musician has combined her formative passions with a striking jewelry homage to her favorite British pop band. Efva Loves The Beatles—which follows her recent eyewear line inspired by fashion icon Iris Apfel—is a collection of dainty pieces ($150 to $1,805) named after Beatles songs like “Here Comes the Sun” and “From Me to You” that are a fitting celebration of Attling's 20 years in the jewelry industry and a must-own for Beatles fans across the universe. 36 Little W. 12th St., efvaattling.com —CB

