Announcing an exciting and innovative development in children's food in the mid-Atlantic, the debut of Mom Made™ Foods, a Washington, D.C.-based company that will offer freshly-made all-natural frozen meals for babies and young children.

Mom Made™ offers conveniently-sized servings made with the freshest ingredients and without any added salt, sugar, additives or preservatives. Mom Made™ products are geared toward the busy parent who wants the best for their child.

Heather Stouffer is the founder and president of Mom Made, a full-time working mother who sought a practical way to introduce her son to a variety of wholesome, nutritious solid foods and create the foundation for a lifetime of healthy eating.

"It is essential that a child's first foods are the purest and freshest available," said Stouffer. "Mom Made's meals are just like those a parent would make in their own kitchen, with the kind of foods that will help young children develop a taste for healthy eating."

Stouffer's culinary consultant is David Rogers, executive chef at Balducci's Food Lover's Market in Bethesda, who has more than 15 years experience preparing the finest foods available.

On June 3 at the Del Ray Farmers' Market in Alexandria, Va., Mom Made™ will introduce its first product line, Mom Made Scoops: healthy, all-natural frozen meals perfect for a baby's introduction to real foods. Scoops will be available in four varieties: Broccoli Purée, Apple Purée, Pear Purée and Sweet Potato Purée.

Mom Made Scoops will be available later this summer at additional Washington-area food markets and grocery stores.
