SINGLE MALT SCOTCH

CAMBELTOWN

Campbeltown, Scotland's smallest whisky-producing region is a remote settlement at the bottom of the long Kintyre peninsula. Only three distilleries remain of the once 34, but they produce five distinctive malt whiskies between them, famed for their smoky, oily character.

We offer malts from two active distilleries.

LOWLANDS

With miles of farmland and neat woodlands, the Lowlands is one of the most charming and accessible whisky regions in Scotland. Encompassing Edinburgh, Glasgow and Fife, it reaches from the Highland/Lowland divide down to the Borders and Dumfries & Galloway, and west to Ayrshire and Arran.

The distilleries produce light, unpeated whiskies - aka 'Lowland Ladies' - known for their sweet, grassy notes and gentle style. Almost all lowland single malt was triple-distilled at one time, but these days, only Auchentoshan uses the technique.

We offer malts from three of the 13 active distilleries.

ISLAY

Islay, off Scotland's west coast, is just 25 miles long. Its rocky bays and sheltered inlets house eight active distilleries and has long been crowned Scotland's 'whisky land'. Islay single malts are renowned for their distinct peatiness with faint notes of sea air and seaweed. They are pungent, powerful and characterful.

We offer malts from all active distilleries.

HIGHLANDS

Scotland's largest geographical whisky region boasts a vast array of styles, from rich and textured to fragrantly floral, from light citrus to full-on peat smoke, as befits an ever-changing landscape of coastline, moor and mountain. Running through the volcanic mountain rock of the Highlands, the water is the purest in Scotland.

The Highland region boasts 41 active distilleries. Some of the most famous malts are from the Highlands. Since the region is so large we have listed the malts by smaller geographic areas.

SPEYSIDE

Speyside is home to some of Scotland's most beautiful scenery and lush landscapes, as well as roughly half of the country's distilleries. The region is carved out of the north-eastern part of the Highland region. The region takes its name from the River Spey, and most of its 50 active distilleries are in the river's beautiful surrounding glens.

Speyside whiskies are characterized by sweet and fruity notes, ranging from ripe pears to sultanas. Hints of nuts and malt are common, and some also possess a refined smokiness.
