

Sacred Shrine

“From its eminence on East Hill, it stands guard over the once proud city. It whispers to the passing pilgrim: ‘I am the Sacred Shrine from which the Gospel first spread through the mountain gulches and over the sagebrush plains of Southern Idaho. The soil on which I rest is holy ground’”

St. Joseph's View

The belfry lifts the cross into the sky
The staircase beckons the weary up the hill
The whiteness glistens in the sinner's eye
And calms the frenzied faithful to be still.

St. Joseph's church surveys this historic town
From high above its iron-shuttered bricks
Where miners bragged of gold they'd found
And celestials' altars fumed with incense sticks.

Since territorial days this sanctuary has seen
The ups and downs in this golden basin
Through deepest snow and brightest summer sheen
From creaking wagon wheels to Harley Davidsons.

As evening falls on the quiet streets below
The westward view of this old church reflects
The setting sun with its rosy golden glow
Reminding those who live here to pay respects.

1863

In the spring of 1863, Bannock (now Idaho City) is the largest city in the Pacific Northwest. Fathers Mesplie and Poulin arrive from Oregon City (now Portland) and celebrate Mass in peoples' homes. They purchase what is now known as East Hill, build our first church, and together celebrate the first Mass on November 16, 1863. Three days later, President Lincoln delivers his address at Gettysburg, PA.

1863 - The Idaho World

November 22nd: "Sunday last, at 10 o'clock, the solemn and impressive ceremonies of dedication were performed at the Catholic Church in this city by the Rev. Father Mesplie of Placerville. A melodeon assisted in the musical department, which, under the skillful hand of Father Poulin accompanied by his voice together with that of R. H. Lindsay would have done credit to many an old establishment and long-trained choir. After the dedication services were over, Father Mesplie delivered an earnest and—but for difficulty in articulating plainly in English—a very impressive discourse, taking for the foundation of his remarks 'The temple of the living God.' The church is dedicated to, and is under the special patronage of St. Joseph, whose name it bears."

Three days before our first Mass, Fathers Mesplie and Poulin (back row to right of door) gather everyone to celebrate: the church is ready!

The Fires of 1865 and 1867

Disaster struck on May 18, 1865. Fire destroyed almost every building on Idaho City's Commercial Street, but St. Joseph's Church escaped the flames. The Idaho World reported: "The Catholic Church was saved by extraordinary efforts—One hundred men, we are told, were on the roof at one time." Father Poulin turned the church into a temporary hospital. Cascie Miller wrote: "The Catholic Church was saved and hundreds crowded to seek shelter within its walls. Father Poulin worked that night bravely, a great strong man, he carried patient after patient from the burning hospital and placed them safely within the walls of the church." Two years later almost to the day, May 17, 1867, fire struck the city again, but this time the church was destroyed. With heroic efforts, Father Mesplie and the people of the community managed to save the furniture, vestments, and all movable objects (including, we believe, the monstrance above the old altar). The loss was estimated at around $8,500. Father Poulin, who had gone to Portland for treatment of inflammatory rheumatism, returned just two days after the fire. He and Father Mesplie started immediately to rebuild. Mass was celebrated in the new building on June 2, 1867, less than a month after the fire. The newspaper called it "one of the handsomest structures in Idaho." The picture to the right shows the building we are sitting in today, gleaming white eight years after it was built.

1869: Idaho's First Cathedral

On March 3, 1868, Pope Pius IX declared Idaho a vicariate apostolic. The vicariate and the territory consisted of what is now the state of Idaho and western portions of what are now Montana and Wyoming. At the same time, the Rev. Louis Aloysius Lootens, born in Belgium, a priest of the Archdiocese of San Francisco, was named first Vicar Apostolic of Idaho. He was consecrated titular bishop of Castabala in San Francisco at the Old St. Mary's Cathedral on August 9, 1868. On his arrival in Idaho, he celebrated a Solemn High Mass at St. Joseph's on February 21, 1869, and as the 1953 History of the Diocese of Boise reported: "Thus the Vicar Apostolic of Idaho began its official existence." A few weeks later, during Holy Week services at St. Joseph's, Bishop Lootens celebrated "the first solemn pontifical ceremony of the Blessing of the Holy Oils ever conducted in Idaho on Maundy Thursday, March 25." Hence, St. Joseph's became known as Idaho's First Cathedral.

1913 - Our Golden Jubilee
 By 1910 the population of Idaho City has fallen to 180. We no longer has a resident pastor at St. Joseph's. In spite of the hard times, we raise about $250 to refurbish the church. At the same time the Extension Society donates the old main altar and the stations of the cross. Twenty percent of the cost of the entire project is spent on the stage coach for the priest, the carpenter, and freight from Boise to Idaho City (eight hours); the downhill return trip is an hour shorter.

1960 - Fr. Joseph Muha
 Father Joe Muha, pictured to the right, the day before his ordination for the Diocese of Boise at the Pontifical College Josephinum. Arriving in Boise and assigned to St. John's Cathedral, he is sent to Idaho City to celebrate his first Mass in Idaho on Father's Day, June 19th.
 He recalls hearing a confession "in a wood shed behind the altar." This is probably the room with the boarded window in the picture to the left, now our washroom.
 We're honored to welcome Fr. Muha back today.

1980
Structural Renovation of the Church
 The current church was rebuilt in less than a month and with no foundation. By 1980 it has settled and has twisted almost a foot out of square. With a federal grant and generous support from the Diocese of Boise, the church structure is lifted and a concrete foundation is added. The chimneys are removed and we add a small storage room to the rear. Studs are added to the interior walls concealing new electrical wiring. An electric furnace is placed in the crawl space, and a small washroom is added behind the sanctuary. The plans call for new wallpaper and refinishing the floors but we run out of time and money and everything is given a coat of white paint. While the building is safe and secure, we lose much of its earlier interior charm.
