ATTILIO SINAGRA: Painting a City in Flux

Noyes Museum and AtlantiCare Present Exhibition of Mid-Century Atlantic City

ATLANTIC CITY, NJ – The Noyes Museum of Art of Stockton University, in partnership with the AtlantiCare Healing Arts program, is pleased to present an exhibition of work by esteemed international painter Attilio Sinagra at the AtlantiCare Regional Medical Center, City Campus, in Atlantic City. Born and raised in Atlantic City, Sinagra used his technically accomplished style to explore the effects of commercial development on the local community. The artwork will be on view to the public June 1, 2016 – August 30, 2016 on the second floor of the City Campus of the AtlantiCare Regional Medical Center.

Attilio Sinagra, AC Street Corner with Limo Approaching Harrah's, watercolor on paper

Sinagra was born to Italian immigrant parents in Atlantic City in 1916. His goldsmith father died and left his haute couture seamstress mother to raise the children. After graduating high school, Sinagra attended military-style college prep school for a year where he learned much of the discipline and resilience that earned him success as a professional artist. After developing his style abroad in Venice, he returned to his hometown to paint a city barely recognizable as the same one he left. His meticulous realism went hand in hand with his reverence for architecture, generating dynamic compositions that evoke a city in the throes of change.
