

Ellen Weber

Ellen is a Professor of Law at the University of Maryland Francis King Carey School of Law and teaches the Drug Policy and Public Health Strategies Clinic. She created this clinical practice to address policies that inhibit the expansion of drug treatment in communities and the criminal justice system and discriminate against individuals with histories of drug dependence. Ellen and her students have worked most recently on legislative and policy projects to implement the Affordable Care Act in Maryland, legislative projects and individual client matters to enforce Mental Health Parity and Addiction Equity Act, a range of client matters to challenge discriminatory zoning, housing and education practices against persons with substance use disorders and legislation to expand access to naloxone. Before joining the law school faculty in 2002, Ellen served as the Senior Vice President for the Legal Action Center, a public interest law firm that specializes in drug, AIDS, and criminal justice issues, and as a trial attorney with the Civil Rights Division of the U.S. Department of Justice.
