

Keiva L. Wiley, EdD began her career as an English instructor in Tampa, Florida after completing a Bachelor's of Arts and Sciences from Florida A&M University in 1995. Dr. Wiley relocated to Maryland in 1997, and began teaching in Montgomery County Public Schools. She attended Bowie State University from 1998-2000, obtaining a Masters of Education in Reading. Immediately afterward, Dr. Wiley transitioned into higher education as an adjunct professor for the Johns Hopkins School of Education. Next, Dr. Wiley was employed by the Fund for Educational Excellence, Achievement First, in Baltimore City. During that professional endeavor, she traveled all over the United States training district and school-based leaders on effective implementation of best literacy practices during instruction. Simultaneously, Dr. Wiley was responsible for servicing, supporting, and providing professional development for nine schools within Baltimore City Public School System. She was recruited by Baltimore City Public Schools to lead as a Site Supervisor in 2001, focusing on improving the home-school connection and launching the literacy initiative. Dr. Wiley started her career with Prince George's County Public Schools in 2004, as Reading Specialist, and was appointed Assistant Principal in 2006 at Suitland High School. She has had an array of experience as assistant principal, serving as administrator at: Kettering Middle School, William Hall Academy (K-8), and Bowie High School. Dr. Wiley obtained a Doctorate in Education in Administration and Supervision from Nova Southeastern University in 2014. In 2006, Dr. Wiley began Ladders Educational Consulting, Inc. providing professional development services to educators. She is the mother of one son, and her passions are reading and traveling.