MONTEREY COUNTY CELEBRATES EARTH DAY BY TAKING ACTION AGAINST PLASTICS IN THE MEETINGS/EVENT INDUSTRY

MCCVB Plays Leading Role in Global Initiative to End Single-Use Plastics

MONTEREY, Calif., April 22, 2019 - The Monterey County Convention & Visitors Bureau (MCCVB) has joined with Positive Impact, an organization dedicated to creating a sustainable meetings industry, as the exclusive destination partner on a quest to end single-use plastics in events and conferences. Together they will celebrate Earth Day with the release of a new set of educational tools and resources to help event organizers, suppliers and attendees find alternatives to remove single-use plastics from their industry.

“Sustainable practices are growing as a key factor in how meeting planners select destinations for their conferences. MCCVB maintains a Client Advisory Board consisting of top planners from around the United States who have made clear their desire for environmental responsibility,” explained Tammy Blount-Canavan, President and CEO of MCCVB. She added, “The feedback we've received has been unequivocal and playing a leading role in eliminating single-use plastics fulfills a core element of our business plan.”

The world-wide initiative includes the United Nations Environment team as well as commitments of support from industry organizations such as Freeman, Informa, IBTM World, Meeting Planners International (MPI), ILEA, SPIN, ASAE and PCMA. “The event industry definitely uses plastics in a variety of ways and this process will not happen overnight but over years,” said Fiona Pelham, CEO of Positive Impact. Pelham went on to explain, “We now have the resources in place to identify how plastic is used in the event industry and the opportunity to work with experts to find alternatives that will not have a negative environmental impact.”

In addition to providing resources for action, this campaign provides the opportunity for anyone to pledge their commitment to ‘addressing the role of plastic in the event industry.’ Helena Rey De Assis, Head of Consumption and Production, UN Environment stated, “We are joining forces with Positive Impact to highlight the importance to measure and monitor plastics use in the event sector. This campaign will provide an opportunity for companies to pledge their commitment and minimize the impact of the event industry in the world’s plastic consumption and use.”

To raise awareness, Positive Impact will conduct a 24-hour global tweet-a-thon on Corporate Social Responsibility (CSR) Share Day on April 23 starting at 12:00 AM GMT under the hashtag #CSRshareDay. The MCCVB along with Positive Impact, Vancouver Tourism, InterContinental San Francisco, MPI, the San Francisco Giants, and others will each host an hour of conversation discussing CSR, sustainability and addressing the use of single-use plastics. Additionally, IMEX Frankfurt will hold a number of educational sessions on the initiative including an education session led by Pelham as well as the first ever politician’s Sustainability Policy Roundtable which will include a discussion on policy support to address plastic.
