At the Hamiltonian, a Treasury for Artists

Philanthropist’s Fellowships Aim to Foster Commercial Success

By Jessica Dawson
Special to The Washington Post

Friday, October 24, 2008

Washington artist, who’s your daddy? If you’re an artist without a gallery, your benefactor could be a well-funded and bespectacled man named Paul So.

When the 43-year-old So accepts you into his arts incubator program, he becomes a Hamiltonian fellow and is eligible for a scholarship that allows you to live rent-free in the disused floor storefront adjacent to a liquor store and the building’s handsome 2,000-square-foot first-floor gallery.

So is the Hong Kong-born benefactor you will receive $2,000 annually and the opportunity of a lifetime: to develop their artists’ marketing savvy. The Hamiltonian goal is to cultivate a network of painting (Rojsuontikul sticks tape to can objects have a wry humor and high production value), the gallery has yet to formalize its three-person exhibition model: An established artist acts as mentor to two or three emerging artists. What can I do to engage her? What’s left is two people’s actual interest in each other. That’s the middle ground.

Dear Carolyn: Does the money my aunt is leaving me have to be accompanied by an assurance that you will understand if the answer is no. Asking, good; don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop someone, and don’t look for reasons to drop some...