Brooklyn, NY - November 2015

A.I.R. Gallery is pleased to announce Gravity Feed, an exhibition by New York Artist Erica Stoller.

Erica Stoller’s sculpture is closely related to drawing with basic elements of line and color. The new wall pieces are made of unexpected materials including plumbing conduit, hula hoops, bead chain, and are fastened with parachute cord, clips and cable ties. Hanging from the wall with an elastic and buoyant quality, shadows and changing light are also essential parts of the composition.

Stoller’s earlier work, on canvas or on paper, dealt with overlapping lines and planes of color. Now these easily available elements are the actual shapes, colors and linear elements. In fact, the materials are the subject matter of the pieces.

In mid-November, Stoller will install new work at A.I.R. Gallery. Some of the elements for Gravity Feed, photographed in the studio, are shown here.

While each piece is a complete and finished work, after being photographed, the parts are often disassembled and reused. The images, then, are the enduring reality while the ingredients themselves are recycled and reappear in various configurations, over and over again. As an extension of her studio practice, Stoller’s new work at A.I.R. will be changed during the course of the four-week show.

The opening reception will be on Thursday, November 19th, and Gravity Feed will remain on view through December 20, 2015.

For all press inquiries, please contact: JoAnne McFarland, Director of Exhibitions & Operations.

The gallery is wheelchair accessible. Please note A.I.R. will be closed for Thanksgiving from November 25-27, 2015.
