Dear Members and Friends,

I am pleased to be serving as the Interim Executive Director of the LSU Museum of Art. Since I arrived in Baton Rouge in 2001, I have watched the museum embark on a transformational move to the Shaw Center for the Arts, where we will celebrate our 10th anniversary in just a few short weeks, and establish itself as a pre-eminent cultural institution within the region. Most recently, the museum’s growing educational programs, including our partnership with White Hills Elementary School and the Neighborhood Arts Project, have been instrumental in the museum creating a deep and rich connection with the Baton Rouge community and furthering its mission to serve as a “cultural and intellectual resource for the University, Baton Rouge and beyond.”

As we look back on our history, we are also anticipating an exciting future. This spring, we will open four exhibitions, all of which examine Louisiana in a global context through art. The paired exhibitions An American in Venice, James McNeil Whistler and His Legacy and Venice Traces, The Art of Sandra Russell Clark present images from Venice developed a century apart and link them to New Orleans investigating the relationship between two of the world’s most famous cities built on water. Margaret Evangeline: On War makes personal the ravages of war through stunning paintings and installation works. Finally, Mexico in New Orleans: A Tale of Two Americas explores the deep connection between artists from Mexico and New Orleans from the 1920s through the 1950s and the impact of that cross-pollination on the art that emerged from both regions during that time period and beyond.

While celebrating these exciting exhibitions we are also in the throes of planning two large projects set to open in fall 2015. By now many of you know that the museum will be presenting the most ambitious exhibition of French art ever to come to Baton Rouge with Toulouse-Lautrec and La Vie Moderne: Paris, 1880-1910 featuring 185 artworks by some of France’s most famous artists. The museum will also be embarking on a reinstallation of the museum’s permanent collection. Taking a fresh look at 19th- and 20th-century Louisiana through the lens of the museum collection, the re-installation will encompass 10,000 square feet of gallery space and include a new education gallery.

As our 10th anniversary at the Shaw Center for the Arts is upon us, we have many exciting programs to offer the Baton Rouge community and we thank you our supporters who help make the LSU Museum of Art a success.

I look forward to seeing you at the museum!

Kristin Sosnowsky
Interim Executive Director
LSU Museum of Art
Ten years ago, on March 5, 2005, the LSU Museum of Art opened in its new facility in the Shaw Center for the Arts. And what an exciting ten years it has been! The museum’s stellar exhibition space and art storage helped earn the museum accreditation from the American Alliance of museums in 2010. The space has enabled the museum to present innovative exhibitions and artworks drawn from collections across the country, with more to come!

In its downtown location, the museum plays a duel role in supporting the University’s mission as well as representing the University to a broader audience in the greater Baton Rouge area. With free admission for all students, the museum’s exhibitions offer starting points for class discussions. Growing internship programs provide opportunities for students and volunteers to experience many facets of museum work. In conjunction with our exhibitions, the museum has initiated a diverse range of programs for visitors with all levels of familiarity with art; programs that include artists’ talks and lectures, school programs, community art outreach initiatives, First Free Sundays, and hands-on creative workshops.

The museum’s membership has grown during the last ten years, and it continues to grow. Our external funding has increased, both from private and corporate donations and prestigious national grants.

In addition to hosting some very exciting temporary exhibitions, the LSU Museum of Art will celebrate its tenth year in the Shaw Center for the Arts with a reinstallation of its permanent art collection, opening in November. The reinstallation will focus on the art and culture of Louisiana, offering a new perspective on our collection and history. So stay with us, and see what we do in the next ten years!

MUSEUM HONORS ANNIVERSARY YEAR WITH NEW ACQUISITIONS

The museum’s remarkable collection of New Orleans silver will return to view in November 2015, with a new emphasis on diverse national and international influences. A star of the reinstallation will be a singular New Orleans tea service made by Kuchler & Himmel for Hyde & Goodrich, c. 1852-53. This rare tea service is topped by Chinese figures that illustrate how New Orleans silver was influenced not just by European silver production, but also by places as far afield as China. It brings a new global perspective to the Louisiana story the museum seeks to tell.

This acquisition was made possible through the generous support of the Paula G. Manship Museum of Art Endowment for Acquisition and Conservation, Winifred L. Gill, and Dr. and Mrs. Trent James.
MEXICO IN NEW ORLEANS

A TALE OF TWO AMERICAS
Mexico in New Orleans: A Tale of Two Americas is the first major museum exhibition to explore the international artistic exchange between Louisiana and Mexico from the 1920s through the 1950s.

The exhibition tells the story of a decades-long dialogue between Mexican and Louisianan artists that critically shaped the art of both countries, resulting in artistic affinities that continue to connect Louisiana and Mexico today.

During the 1920s and 1930s, a series of celebrated Mexican art exhibitions brought the art and culture of modern Mexico to Louisiana. By 1928, the New Orleans Times-Picayune had proclaimed Mexican artist Diego Rivera “the greatest painter on the North American continent,” and encouraged Louisiana artists to take counsel from modern Mexican art. In 1930, a Times-Picayune critic urged Louisianan artists to turn their gaze away from the art of Europe and toward that of Mexico, arguing that Mexican art was “more nearly related to [Louisiana] emotionally” than European art. By the early 1930s, the strength of this artistic connection between the two regions caused a writer for The New Orleanian to characterize Louisianan art as having a “distinct Mexican tinge”; by 1933, the Times-Picayune cited an undeniably “strong Mexican trend” in Louisiana art.

Mexico in New Orleans: A Tale of Two Americas features over 80 works by both Mexican and Louisianan artists, with many drawn from the LSU Museum of Art’s collection of works by Diego Rivera, Caroline Durieux, and Conrad A. Albrizio, among others. In the exhibition, paintings, watercolors, drawings, and prints by these artists will be supplemented with sculpture, Mexican decorative arts, and ephemera such as pamphlets and postcards that help tell the story of Mexico in New Orleans—and New Orleans in Mexico.

VENICE, TRACES
THE ART OF SANDRA RUSSELL CLARK
FEBRUARY 6, 2015, TO APRIL 19, 2015 • OPENING RECEPTION FEBRUARY 26

Venice, Traces: The Art of Sandra Russell Clark explores contemporary Louisiana photographer Sandra Russell Clark’s meditations on Venice as a city with an especially evocative relationship to memory, history, and, in her case, loss. In 2005, Clark lost all of her photographic negatives and prints of Venice—the product of decades of work—during Hurricane Katrina. In 2012, she returned to Venice to retrace her steps and recapture those lost images of the city, as well as to reflect upon Venice’s unexpectedly resonant role in her own recent past.

While in Venice, Clark found herself drawn to the city’s storied cemeteries, which deeply reminded her of those she had photographed in New Orleans. In the exhibition, Clark’s celebrated Elysium series of photographs of New Orleans cemeteries will be placed beside her Traces series from Venice, drawing out the relationship between New Orleans and Venice as two historic cities built on water that not only share a struggle for survival, but also a belief in recovery, hope, and the power of history.

A shell unearthed in the late 1890s during an archaeological dig in Java was recently rediscovered in a Leiden Museum vault by a researcher who noticed something unusual about it, a faint zig-zag line incised around its edge. This undulating mark—a simple enough design shared across cultures, across eras, and across our globe—is remarkable, as it was created half a million years ago!

Prior to this discovery the earliest known art was an Indonesian cave painting dating back 40,000 years. What this means is that the first makers of art were not our ancestors, Homo Sapiens, but rather Homo Erectus, who until now were not known as artmakers. We may ponder the question of whether this zig-zag pattern is truly art, but we do know that it was not accidental or created by nature; it was made deliberately, by scraping a shark’s tooth into the shell. The end result is a decoration that is visually pleasing even to today’s viewer.

This story reminds us of the power of art—and of the fact that art-making is deeply rooted in our collective DNA. Think for a moment about the role of art in your life. Do you consciously practice as an artist? Do you doodle subconsciously on paper during meetings? Is art something that you collect and have hanging on your walls, or is it something more vast, such as a perfect sunset, a majestic mountain range, or a breathtaking field of flowers?

Whatever your conception of art, there is no doubt that it is part of our lives. At the LSU Museum of Art, celebrating expression is what we are all about. Through our exhibitions and programs, we strive to activate that inner artist. We know first-hand that every child is an artist. We also know that not every adult is an artist. Yet everyone—regardless of their age, background, and experience—has the capacity to connect with art. This connection serves many needs: to comfort, to heal, to enjoy, to inspire, to recall, to question, to think.

This spring, take a moment and ask yourself why art is important to you. Come to the museum and experience old favorites from our permanent collection, or make new discoveries in our special exhibitions. Challenge yourself to delve deeper into subjects through our lectures. Try your hand at creating art in our adult workshops. Bring a child to one of our dynamic family programs. Reconnect with your inner artist, and you may be pleasantly surprised.

"Every child is an artist. The problem is how to remain an artist once we grow up."

MISSION STATEMENT

The LSU Museum of Art seeks to enrich and inspire through collections, exhibitions, conservation and education, serving as a cultural and intellectual resource for the University, Baton Rouge, and beyond.
Corporate membership at the LSU Museum of Art is an annual program designed to give exceptional access to the museum’s collections, exhibitions, and exclusive VIP and networking events. Revenue from corporate membership provides critical annual operating support for an array of museum programs, while Corporate Members enjoy benefits that reward employees, entertain clients, provide valuable brand recognition, and connect with community partners.

Paula G. Manship was a philanthropist in every sense of the word. She looked for real need in the community, gravitated toward what would make a difference, and gave generously. During her lifetime, Ms. Manship was a lover of the arts. She was fascinated by Asian art, and even attended art history classes at LSU with her niece. She generously gave toward acquisitions as the museum needed private philanthropy to help grow the permanent collection.

The Paula G. Manship Museum of Art Endowment for Acquisition and Conservation continues the work Ms. Manship started during her life. The Endowment provides critical funds to the museum to purchase new art acquisitions and for the conservation of new acquisitions. The funds recently allowed the museum to acquire an important New Orleans coin silver repoussé tea service (c. 1852–1953) made by Christopf Christian Kuchler and Adolphe Himmel. Drawing from the global influence in New Orleans during the time, the tea service lids have small Chinese figures. Ms. Russell remarks, “It is so great that the first purchase with the Endowment funds have an Asian influence. My aunt would love that!”

If you are interested in learning more about how your planned gift can be a great philanthropic investment, please contact Sarah Cortell Vandersypen at 225-389-7212.
Internationally recognized, New York-based Luba Lukova is regarded as one of the most distinctive image-makers working today. Whether by using an economy of line, color and text to pinpoint essential themes of the human condition or to succinctly visualize social commentary, her art is undeniably powerful and thought provoking.

Lukova’s solo exhibitions have been held at UNESCO, Paris; DDD Gallery, Osaka, Japan; La MaMa Gallery, New York; and The Art Institute of Boston. She has received commissions from Adobe Systems, Sony Music, and Harvard University. Her work is included in the permanent collections of the Museum of Modern Art, New York; Denver Art Museum; The Library of Congress; and Bibliothèque nationale de France, Paris. Her numerous awards include Grand Prix Savignac at the International Poster Salon, Paris; the Golden Pencil Award at the One Club, New York; Honor Laureate at the International Poster Exhibition in Fort Collins, CO. The Huffington Post recently included Lukova’s work as number one in their review “15 Women Artists Who Have Left Their Mark On Modern Design”.

Lukova’s mastery of turning a few lines into the complex and sublime will be shown at the Alfred C. Glassell Gallery in a comprehensive collection of social commentary art. “Graphic Guts” is also the name of Lukova’s new book, published by Clay & Gold. Transcending language, culture, and politics, the book features visual reactions to many of the pressing issues of our time, such as peace, corruption, gender inequality and the environment. www.clayandgold.com
