Dufy, along with Henri Matisse, André Derain, Georges Rouault, and Maurice de Vlaminck, was a founding member of the seminal Modernist movement Fauvism from 1905-1908. By the early nineteen twenties, Dufy, like the other Fauves, had moved on artistically. In Dufy's case, he had become focused on capturing the effects of light and color in the south of France. By the time of his death in 1954, Dufy had spent part of four decades painting scenes of the idyllic sea, sky, and land in and around the French Riviera. During this time he developed a highly personal, idiosyncratic type of painting characterized as "effortless calligraphic lines and broad bright color areas" by a leading critic.

CONCLUSION

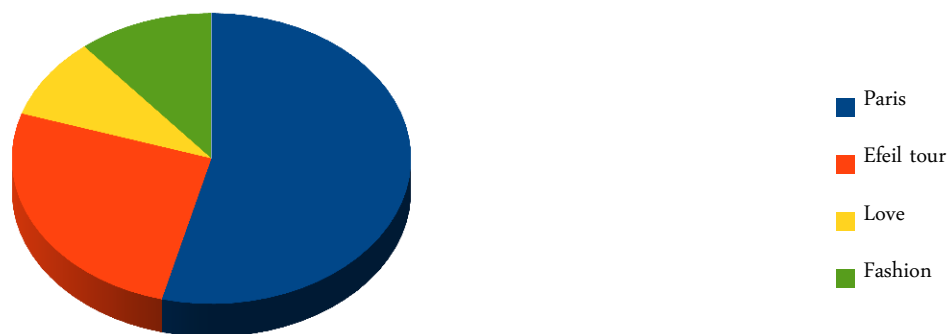

American store taking a french title for more smart.

Stereotype of France acts positively as negatively on the image of France.

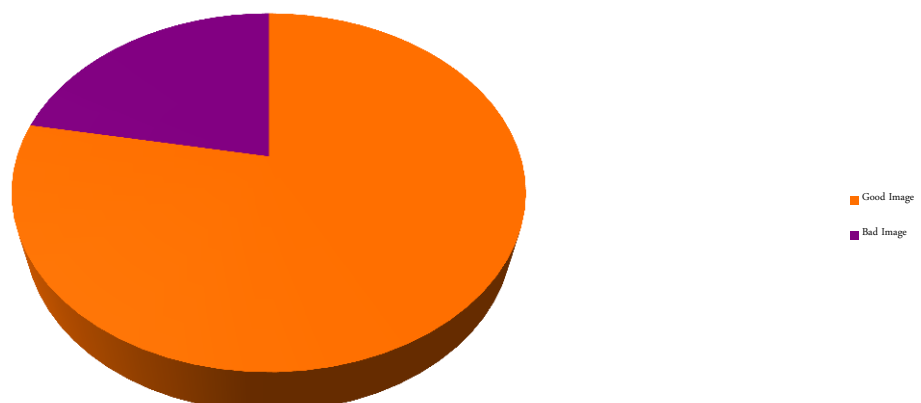

The American love France for his style and his brand . But the French are not perfect and all acts affect the image of France , for example the soccer during the world cup 2011 or with DSK Dominique Strauss-Kahn The French victim on the accusation of violence in the United States .

All Americans think France is very glamorous and all the French do is very smart but the French image is to degrade. Lasting it's two last years like you can see on my diagram , That I have been able to make has the help of the result of the soundings in which my friend Laurianne Obama an ex-fellowship 2010 was able to do the last year during her travel in Oklahoma City.
