Sophie Cousins

Sophie Cousins is a health journalist based in South Asia. Her work focuses on the systems that perpetuate gender inequality and the impact this has on women's and girls' health. Prior to moving to the region she was based between Lebanon and Iraq. Her short and long-form work has appeared in publications including the Guardian, New York Times, Mosaic Science, London Review of Books, Foreign Policy and the Caravan, among others. She is a grantee with the South Asia Journalists Association and the International Reporting Project. She has received multiple reporting fellowships from the United Nations Foundation and the National Press Foundation.