Joseph Podlesnik:
"The Pain, Boredom and Euphoria of Looking"

- Opening Reception:
  April 13th, 2024
  1:00 – 3:00 PM

Joseph Podlesnik is an artist trained in drawing and painting, mediums that influence his approach to photography. Podlesnik lives in Phoenix, Arizona and exhibits his work nationally and internationally. He is currently Visual Arts Adjunct Faculty at Stockton University and is Facilitator Lead for the Digital Photography Cornell Certificate Program.

For the “The Pain, Boredom and Euphoria of Looking” exhibition, Podlesnik states: “My intent is to select color and black and white photographs which involve some personal physical discomfort (while capturing photographs - namely the photograph titled “Cliff Face”), degrees of boredom (tolerating, organizing and capturing a world full of redundant, irrelevant visual information) and the euphoria I experience while capturing photographs and exploring their effects in post-processing. The intent is to arrive at formal order, unity, mood, complexity, ambiguity, and in many cases engage the viewer in frame edge-to-frame edge visual activity.

Podlesnik adds: “For me, the camera lens depicts perspective too easily, which is why I capture and develop photographs which often frustrate readable perspectival space, through glass and light reflections and refractions and spatial ambiguity, bringing the viewer’s eye stubbornly back to the surface of the image, so the mind is not allowed to linger in readable/navigable space too long. For me, the photographic image is not only a window through which to see the visible world, but also a maker of flat surfaces which stunt or block logical space. I see photography and pictures not only as documentation, but as commenting on or reenacting visual perception itself.”
