

Makers Take On Museum

A group of passionate crafters from Etsy, the online marketplace for handmade goods, have teamed up with the American Museum of Natural History to stock the gift store with items reminiscent of the renowned collection. The blue whale pendant, handmade by Etsy user Craft0logy, is the perfect souvenir for museumgoers who fall in love with the iconic whale in the museum's Milstein Family Hall of Ocean Life. There's also a 3-D birthday card with dinosaur skeletons poking out from a model of the museum that's unlike anything we've seen. But we're obsessed with these eco-felt coats, made of 100-percent postconsumer plastic bottles, that let kids become fantastic little foxes (right). The green dino version is just as adorable. | American Museum of Natural History Shop, Central Park West at W. 79th St., 800.671.7035

Family Jewels

The Buccellati family, known for its Renaissance-style jewelry, has settled into a new five-story flagship on Madison Avenue. However, the classic, exquisite jewelry demonstrates that the family still has its heart in Milan, where Mario Buccellati opened his first boutique in 1919. Buccellati's signature textural gold designs, like these Rombi pendant earrings (left), which feature white and yellow gold with diamonds, showcase masterful goldsmithing and incredible attention to detail. Shoppers can find fine jewelry, silver objects, watches and even gold iPhone cases at the store. | Buccellati, 714 Madison Ave., 212.308.2900

Time Travelers, Take Notice

A fancy French eyewear brand has a vision to break the cyclical nature of fashion trends with its statement-making glasses for men and women. Anne et Valentin combines retro-shaped frames with experimental, futuristic details for a result that would have been just as fashion-forward in the 1950s as it will be in the 2050s (or so we predict). Take the mint-green beauties above: Anne et Valentin embellishes the classic Wayfarer shape with a geometric cutout frame and colored lenses. Behind a set of shades this cool, wearers go incognito, but definitely don't go unnoticed. ### Summer Scent

With notes of juicy mandarin, cardamom, pimento and tonka, Vince Camuto's newest fragrance for men, Solare, is perfect for a summer's eve on the town. The supple orange leather casing is so sophisticated, you may just want to take the bottle along! | Vince Camuto, 537 Third Ave., 212.937.5750
