ADDRESSING THE CHILD MIGRANT CRISIS: Five Ways We Make a Difference

Certi Corp, Supporters, Experts: President Clinton and members of Congress have been speaking out on the plight of thousands of unaccompanied minors from mostly Central America. The United States, with the help of its allies, is taking a bold stand in May to help the Central American migrants arrive safely in the U.S. to reunite with their families. Experts say that this effort is a crucial step in helping to address the root causes of the migrant crisis.

1. One-on-One Advising for Victims

Families targeted by gangs and Sanctuary cities in El Salvador have few options for legal advice. For those with the resources, a full-blown legal team can be retained. Most of these families have minimal resources and rely on help from local advocates. We provide legal advice to help these families navigate the legal system and seek protection for their children.

2. Transforming the Root Causes through Community Development

In addition, Central American juveniles, Visa, President Joe Biden said, "To kick off the nation's immigration reform effort, we will make investments in communities and into the root causes of migration to help lift people out of poverty and towards higher standards of living."

3. Ensuring Access to Justice

Judge Elizabethstick, President of the United States of America, is leading the nation's efforts to ensure that migrants have access to the justice system. The new law provides legal aid to migrants to help them navigate the legal system and seek protection for their children.

4. Advocating for Reforms in El Salvador

In response to this crisis, the United States is pressing Central American leaders to act to address the issues that are causing the migration crisis.

5. Advocating for Action in the U.S.

The latest in the Trump administration's efforts to address the root causes of migration was announced today. The new law provides legal aid to migrants to help them navigate the legal system and seek protection for their children.

What You Can Do

You can join us in our efforts to address the current humanitarian and migration crisis in U.S. and in Central America by making a contribution to our humanitarian and community development programs. We invite you to make a gift today and help us to address the root causes of migration.