These children and youth are part of 110 families registered with Cristosal. On average, each family has two children. 53.1% of the children and youth had already been displaced by the time they were interviewed by Cristosal. The departments from which most children and youth fled were La Libertad, Cuscatlán, and San Salvador.

Most victims were between 0-11 years old. There was a slightly higher number of boys in the younger age range, and a slightly higher number of girls in the older age group.
131 children and youth had been in school before they experienced the acts of violence that caused displacement. 51.9% left school because of those acts of violence.

The main acts of violence reported by families with children were threats, the murder of a relative, attempted murder, and extortion. These acts of violence were either directed at the child specifically or the family group as a whole.

126 children were direct victims of violence

64 (50.8%) Boys

62 (49.2%) Girls