This will be our second discussion on the topic of lesser-known companies that were made in the early period of stretch glass.

The first call in February 2017 featured the lesser-known company of Vineland Flint Glass Company. In November we will be exploring another of the lesser-known companies that made Stretch Glass: Lancaster Glass Company, Lancaster, Ohio.

In the 1920's, Lancaster produced a line referred to as Lustre, which can be identified as stretch glass. We will discover some of the unique features, colors and shapes of this beautiful glass that will help us identify Lancaster stretch glass from the stretch glass made by other companies. Our experts will also share which pieces are more common to find.
