The Historical Society of The United States Court of International Trade

Formed to preserve and promote the history of the United States Court of International Trade

Background on the Historical Society:

The Historical Society of the United States Court of International Trade was established in 2004. The Society seeks to preserve the history of the United States Court of International Trade and promote public awareness of the Court's role in resolving disputes in the field of customs and international trade.

Projects being undertaken by the Historical Society:

The Historical Society is involved in a number of preliminary projects to achieve its mission:

- Recording oral histories of retired and senior judges and selected other personnel of the Court to preserve the history of the Court in the words of those who have been charged with administering justice and making the Court function for the parties appearing before the Court. Such oral histories may be transcribed in the future. Histories collected will be available to researchers and other interested members of the public.
- Helping to preserve materials about the Court and its predecessor tribunals. Materials of interest will include books, manuscripts, documents, photographs, artwork and artifacts of the Court and its judges and will include speeches of members of the Court.
- Publishing information about the Court of historical significance on the Society's website or through other means.

- As funding permits, acquiring or otherwise obtaining (e.g., through gift or loan) items of historical significance regarding the Court or its predecessor tribunals and having such items included in displays at the James L. Watson Court of International Trade Building or elsewhere.
- Holding periodic meetings and educational events about the Court and its History.

Benefits of Membership:

When you become a member you will be helping to ensure that the history of the United States Court of International Trade is recorded and maintained. With expanded global trade, the Court plays a unique role in the U.S. system of justice, dealing with matters of frequent global significance.

As a member, you will not only be supporting the activities of the Society but also helping to promote public awareness of the Court and its role. You will be invited to attend periodic meetings (including the annual meeting) and events of the Historical Society, and receive materials developed by the Society for distribution.

We look forward to your membership.
