Above: To tie a contemporary Montecito home into its wooded surroundings, architect Ron Radziner crafted it from Santa Barbara sandstone—excavated from the home site itself—as well as cedar, glass and plaster. Its strong rectilinear volumes stand in the landscape as a piece of sculpture. Ample terraces and balconies provide for coveted indoor-outdoor California living.

Right: Architect Hagy Belzberg transformed a nondescript Hollywood Hills home into a modern showplace. To that end, he wrapped a stainless-steel fascia around the home, which, depending on the time of day, changes its appearance. Custom Honduran mahogany doors by Westside Door & Moulding mark the entrance and are flanked by windows from Fleetwood Windows & Doors.
